EDUCATIONAL VALUES

By Ezekiel Leavitt

"The awakening of our best sympathies, the cultivation of our best and purest tastes, strengthening the desire to be useful and good, and directing youthful ambition to unselfish ends—such are the objects of true education."—J. T. Headley.

"A true teacher should penetrate to whatever is vital in his pupil, and develop that by the light and heat of his own intelligence."—E. P. Whipple.

"Vernunft und Wissenschaft, Des Menschen allerhoehste Kraft!"

—Goethe, Faust.

In all grades of educational work, educational values is the crucial question in all theories of choice of subjects. A measure must be found by means of which we should be able to assign a higher or a lower value to different lines of study. We measure the educational value of a subject, all will agree, by its efficacy in promoting the realization of the aim of education, preparation for complete living. We measure a man's worth by his intellectual grasp, his esthetic and ethical insight, his power for action toward right and useful ends. Since these make the ideal aim of education; since they are qualities tending toward complete living, a study should be valued as it best contributes toward developing them.

We must, however, consider that individuals cannot be treated as a mass, but as persons with diverse wants and capacities, and that educational value is not a quality belonging inherently to any study. Only as it fits the time, place and child does the value belong to the study. This brings to study how we may educate every child in order to realize in him the ideas controlling people; how to put at the disposal of the pupils all that society has already accomplished for itself. Mere passivity acquired by gaining a knowledge of the best of subjects is not enough, the interests and powers must so dominate a person as to impel him to action. I believe then that the kind of work a man voluntarily engages in and the value of it for himself and for society depends on his dominant interests, on a person's motives and on his skill in his activity. A comprehensive and intelligent education ought to take into account the innate diversities of individuals and produce the best results thereby. Educational values ought to be accorded to different subjects according as the different power develops the most and the highest incentives to activity. We must then compare the incentives obtained through the different studies, for with interest obtained in different fields of work, habits of efficiency and thorough and successful achievement can be developed. For the individual pupil the relative educational value of different subjects will correspond to the degree of interest they develop.

We have stated that man's usefulness and happiness are best secured when his interests and capacities harmonize with his life work, and when his participation in the varied interests of life is large. We can best then realize the aim of education by subjecting the pupil to the influence of social and ethical incentives. We should then have to consider subjects which yield the greatest number of such incentives as knowledge of great worth. Great value, then, would have to be accorded to the study of the best literature, for by precept, by example, by every illustracy in word and act, on gentleness and disinterestedness. Through such good reading can be brought clearly to light the hatefulness and degradation of falseness, brutality and of self-greed.

In a consideration of educational values, although certain studies, like tastes and powers. This principle is beginning to be recognized and is becoming a dominant factor in the arranging of all school curriculums. Advance in the physical sciences, in hygiene, and in attempts to gain spontaneous activity from the pupil show that the pupil is no longer considered a passive receptacle into which is poured knowledge; but that the scholar is the dominant factor, dominating not only the sequence of teaching but the very choice of subjects. The law of the pupil's development must be the law of choice and the sequence to be followed by the teacher. Modern educators have breathed unwavering confidence in laws of nature as mightier than any human devices. The first factor claimed by them in the principle of the educational value of different subjects is the development or the highest possible evolution of the pupil; the second factor is the demand for the useful, the practical, the near at hand. This last is powerful because it contains a great deal of truth; it is also dangerous because it contains only a part of truth. It declares that the end of life is adaptation to environment, and in the hands of men like Spencer science is made the watchword of this second factor.

The reform movement presents these two phases; first, the development of the individual according to the law of nature born within; second, according to environment, wherein is the dualism of the ideal and the real. The truth is found in the synthesis of the two. The true principle of education is development as modified by environment. We wish to consider values in secondary education, a period for most children between the ages of fourteen and eighteen. This is a period characterized by unprecedented physical growth, a period of intellectual turmoil and confusion, a period characterized by flaming up of emotions not bridled by reason, a period of birth of will and of individual character. The period is an age of the best lines of realizing himself as a member of society.

All the pupils must in an ideal secondary school learn to participate in life by knowing the world in which we live in order to adapt themselves to it in thought; in order to gain power to work therein with success. We must learn to know the world as representing the correlated nature of man, to know the world to gain

ness and happiness are best secured when his interests and capacities harmonize with his life work, and when his participation in the varied interests of life is large. We can best then realize the aim of education by subjecting the pupil to the influence the beginning of lofty aspiration, of yearnings to sacrifice oneself for something noble and true. In the growing boy there is more feeling than power to co-ordinate, and such power can only be gained by action; hence arises the educational value of the playground, the laboratory, the workshop, debating societies as incentives to individual investigations and independent work. This much far helps toward the development of the child, but the development is always modified by its environment. The secondary school cannot be open to broad, or rather free, election, for the meaning of the various studies has not yet been brought to the conscious understanding of the pupils. The various powers have not yet been developed to the full degree of conscious strength, the natural bent of the student has not yet been fairly tested. I believe that the child must be trained by a wise oversight of his elections to discover his natural bent, his dominant interests, to work along the soul's highest realization; therefore we must know the world in its different phases. Each subject has its peculiar value for knowledge, for power, for practical life; it has its special value for us individuals according to the interest we take in it and the incentives to activity it arouses in us. We cannot make exact but only approximate estimates of each line of study.

The study of the languages obtains its value because it is the instrument that makes social organization possible; it enables each to profit by the experience of all. Through means of the languages human knowledge is preserved and the progress of civilization is made possible. It is one of the powers for the understanding of human character under all its different environments. Literature gained through the study of the languages (our own and the modern ones preferred for the purpose of literature, because the ancient ones are too difficult for us to get an economical value from them unless we are specially interested in them) gives esthetic and ethical culture and in a practical way applies poetry to life. Literature arouses many interests, but in itself does not yield much power.

Language and the sciences comprise the great mass of human information in the purest types. The sciences are the most perfect embodiment of truth and of the ways of getting at truth. It exemplifies the devices for establishing fact under the variety of circumstances and saps the credit of everything affirmed without truth. In proportion to our regard for truth and the means of ascertaining what is true is our power over the material and the moral world. The greatest test of knowledge is the test of practical fulfillment, and science is such knowledge. Then, again, the sciences are a great liberalizing power in the mode of setting forth generalized knowledge with gradations of generality and with various relations of co-ordination. All this value it gives to the individual most interested in it.

The experimental and inductive sciences gives intellectual discipline. Inductive generalization through observation and experimentation attains here its highest force. Such sciences teach how far empirical generalization is to be trusted. Their fertilizing information diffuse themselves in the conduct and the arts of life. They provide a guidance of life. An understanding of them enables its followers to penetrate into many of the secret workings of the natural world, thus the natural sciences studied by those who have been especially interested in them are largely the basis of our material civilization.

Mathematics treats of quantitative knowledge, and has its own peculiar intellectual training. Its method of procedure is purely deductive or demonstrative. It makes possible all commerce, great structures and the higher development of physical science. Through it the pupil gains in deductive reasoning power, but this power can seldom be carried over into other fields owing to the special data it deals with. I know that it is a most dry and unsatisfactory study to those who are not interested in it, but to the initiated it gives a feeling of intellectual power; it has its own charm and fascination. Its marvelous devices when once worked out impels toward new trials of new problems, and the successful worker of intricate and fascinating methods finds it a most wonderful study. It does give sustained attention; but does not teach to observe, to generalize, to classify. Too exclusive devotion to it, at the cost of other valuable knowledge, gives, I think, a wrong bias of mind toward truth generally.

An interest in history and economics is a broader one; it is an interest in human life, in human character, in the world about us.

From history, if it is taught in the right spirit, the pupil who loves it and even the ordinary student of history can get an understanding of the evolution of the forms of government, an evolution better and better adapted to permit individual freedom, and the participation of all citizens in the administration of government. History is a corrective to the one-sidedness of the method of science. Science seeks explanation in the mechanical conditions and impulses received from the environment, while history keeps its gaze fixed on human purposes and studies the genesis of national actions through the previous stages of feelings, convictions and conscious ideas. In history the pupil has for his object self-activity, reaction against environment. When we ask for the educational value of history we ask for the power of history to educate. Man's task is the making, the developing of a noble ideal of life. History is a record of life and must therefore reckon with the two sides of life, the ideal and the real. The true struggle and the determining issues of life are found in the ideal aspect of history. History shows the concrete facts in which philosophy, ethics, psychology, political science and economy find their illustrations. The recorded facts of history exist to be judged, and have value only in proportion to the thought wrought into them. As mere facts they impede action. The real facts of history are concrete manifestations of the ideal, and their worth for men is measured by the recognition of the truth they embody. Not until history is put on a basis commensurable with its dignity as a record of life can it have efficacy in education of which it is capable. Its study gives development to the powers of man which general education demands.

Its study gives development to the powers of man which general education demands.

There is a great educational value in the constant exercise of analysis. The pupil must feel in history its current of passions, its strong out-reaching after desired objects, its aspiration, its struggles, its onward sweep. Contemporary life must be grasped in this way. History and the life of to-day must be identified. Psychological powers find constant exercise in the study of history. The pupils gain an understanding of human nature and grasp the manifold sides of man's nature. The logical and ethical powers find wide range if the teacher is interested in the great ethical, political and philosophical questions of the time. For special education other studies may be better, but for a general education history has a great educational value.

Interesting Exhibit at Dresden.
Perhaps the most interesting and certainly the most novel section of the Dresden hygiene exhibition, writes a correspondent of the London, England, Standard, is the Jewish one. Two spacious halls are devoted to the exhibits of the sanitation of Biblical, ancient and mediaeval Jewry. A rood part of the exhibit is occupied by the exhibition of Torahs, to which attention is paid to a Torah reputed to be about one thousand years of age, and written on red leather. The walls of the section in which are these exhibits are covered with Hebrew and German texts of the hygienic laws promulgated by Moses. The inside of the hall is occupied by a plaster cast of King Solomon's lakes and water works, while here are also to be seen fine books and drawings and plans of the water supply of Biblical Jerusalem and of ancient Jewish residences and reliques found in excavations. A separate group deals with housing, showing the evolution from tents to houses of mud and later of stone. Another group deals with the rules to be observed in eating and drinking. The customs at meals are illustrated by plaster models. There are pictures of old ovens, fireplaces, grain stores, models of flour mills and the reliques of original grain crushing stones. In the mediaeval class the walls are covered with quotations from the Talmud, as the source of sanitary laws. The old and new of the same is represented by plastic models. An important feature of mediaeval hygiene of the Jews was the public baths, and to demonstrate these there are bathing and washing requisites, together with a collection of hand washing basins. The management of meat is instructively illustrated by a series of pictures showing the processes, beginning with the "Wolfering." A plaster illustrates Shechita.

Silks for Spring

Although silk fashions for the coming Spring are still vague, there is a strong feeling that Foulards have not as yet reached the height of their popularity.

Foulards have held undisputed leadership in fashionable demand for several seasons—a leadership without doubt due to the beauty, quality and water-resisting features of Cheney

More "Future of the Rabbinate"—noy Rabbinic-Agitation Against Heavy Naturalization—The Jewish Hospital Scheme.

LONDON, Oct. 20.—Within a week or so the leaders of Anglo-Jewry will have to at least begin to face the problem of the future of the Chief Rabbinate. His will will probably be Chief Rabbi, had expressed his wish that a successor should be appointed without delay when the office was rendered vacant by his death. But though a considerable time has already elapsed the vacancy is not yet filled.

The stipend of the Chief Rabbi consists of grants made by the United Synagogue and various congregations throughout the country; thus the appointment will be naturally made with those contributing to the fund in question. Immediate steps are about to be taken for convening a conference, consisting of delegates of the various contributing bodies to the Chief Rabbi's fund. An exhaustive examination will take place of the present spiritual needs of the Jews of this country. The community has grown apace, but there has been no similar expansion in the field of ecclesiastical government. Year by year the work of the Chief Rabbi has become greater and more difficult, and a natural corollary to this fact has been a weaker association between the spiritual head of the community and those to whose needs he is to minister. It is because the clergy and laity alike recognize the reality of this weakness that attention will, in the first instance, be directed to the question, how far the regime established by the late Dr. Adler fails to meet modern requirements.

Hitherto, partly out of respect to the memory of the late Chief Rabbi, and partly from a laudable desire not to hamper in any way the free discussions of the United Synagogue and those who will be called upon to find a solution to the problem, discussion has been withheld on the subject; but with the summer vacation out of the way and with the passing of the holy festival, the community has thrown itself into a careful consideration of the future of the Rabbinate and the innumerable problems connected therewith. It is, as a writer points out, not so much a question of who is to be the man to fill up the post-became vacant by the death of Herman Adler, but what are to be the duties of the Chief Rabbi in the future. With the Jewish Religious Union on the one hand and the orthodox bodies, as represented by the foreign rabbis' conference of Leeds, on the other, there is clearly a divergence in the community itself which will require the most delicate handling if the conflicting interests are to be reconciled, and if that unity between all sections is to be established which alone can make for communal well-being. It is for considerations such as these that the subject is arousing such keen interest, for it is no exaggeration to say that the whole future of the community must be affected by the choice to be made.

An attempt is being made to arouse greater Jewish communal enthusiasm, and support for a unique East End project. Some time ago it was ascertained that the exigencies of their employment precluded many Jewish fathers from carrying out their morning devotions in the presence of their children. The head of the family was obliged to be at his work long before his children had risen, and, as a result, the children were brought up without adequate regard being paid to their daily spiritual obligations. The matter was taken up by the authorities of the Commercial Talmud Torah, a noted Hebrew school, with the result that a series of week-day morning services was arranged in the Talmud Torah prior to the children's departure for the day school. The services, which begin at 8 a. m. have been wonderfully successful. The congregation never numbers less than 200. Each section—for due regard is paid to the age of the worshipper—has its own boy rabbi, in every case an elder pupil. The boy Rabbis earnestly reading the morning services is a lesson in juvenile thoroughness. Encompassed by their little woolen Talith, these cantors in embryo seem to feel that on their future depends, to no small extent, the future of local Judaism. The devotions end at an hour that enables the congregants to reach school in time for the morning bell. It must not be assumed that these services tend in any way to retard the progress of Anglicisation in the ranks of those who participate in them. This pious little Rabbi is the best batsman in his school, and that other little fellow with the big phylacteries on his forehead has won far more scholarships than one would credit.

It is evident that a children's synagogue such as this could find sufficient support in any locality where the day schools are within a short radius of each other. It may likewise be remarked that to these boy Rabbis are invariably assigned the leading roles in the Hebrew plays, for which their busy educational lives in the Commercial Road is justly famed. Not a few of the lads are destined to infuse a new blood into the Rabbinate of the future. In the East End, and fully conversant with its teeming social needs, they will assuredly help to remedy those ills that affect the teeming thousands east of Aldgate.

At the next meeting of the Board of Deputies E. S. Straus will move that a resolution be formed to call upon the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Home Secretary for the purpose of asking them to reduce the present heavy naturalization fee. This represents one of the many attempts to bring the acquisition of citizenship within the reach of many decent, law-abiding individuals to whom the cost is at present prohibitive. There exist at the present time Jewish organizations which meet the needs of this class by arranging for the payment of naturalization fees, by instalments. The fact that many hundreds avail themselves of these facilities and within a comparatively short time find their migration to these shores, is a sufficient indication of the anxiety of the foreign Jew to tender himself worthy of citizenship. The latest move in this regard to naturalization facilities comes from an important Jewish friendly society, order, "The Grand Order of Israel," which has formed a committee for the purpose of facilitating the naturalization of its foreign members.

The latest phase of the movement to establish a specifically Jewish hospital in the East End of London is an announcement that now that the site of Stepney Green is nearly purchased, building operations will commence probably next summer. Most European countries have their own Jewish hospitals, staffed and ordered by Jews. Leeds and Manchester only have their Jewish hospitals, but London has hitherto considered the existing provision ample. The opposition shown towards the movement by earlier stages has almost died away, and many of the wealthier members of the community who had hitherto failed to appreciate the utility of a Jewish hospital have been won over. The present scheme is largely supported by the humbler members of the community, the weekly "copper collection" totaling only the average £200. There are "aid societies" throughout London, and special branches for boy and girl helpers.

The promoters of the movement have made it clear from the outset that the idea of a Jewish hospital had not been brought into being in a spirit of antagonism towards the great London hospitals. As a matter of fact, they appreciate the splendid arrangements that exist in many instances for the provision of separate wards for Jewish patients, and separate kitchens, where the food is cooked according to the requirements of the exacting Hebrew dietary. But the demand for a Jewish hospital may be traced to a desire to create in a specifically Jewish atmosphere in the treatment of hospital cases, "not only," say the promoters, "in order that they may follow their religious ritual apart from the presence of unympathetic strangers, but also that they may experience the comfort and sympathy of the racial sentiment which would be fostered under a Jewish roof." It is urged that congenial surroundings such as these would have a wide effect, creating that peace of mind that has a beneficial effect upon the course and progress of serious ailments.

Apart from the benign influences of a Jewish atmosphere, considerable attention has been devoted to the difficulties of the language question. It is evident that only the best results are possible when doctor, patient, and nurse speak a common tongue. In cases where there are many demands, the staff of a large hospital, this inability to comprehend each other must make an unsatisfactory state of affairs. The "Yiddish tongue" will be spoken by the out-patient physicians when the hospital is at length brought into being, and although the present facilities for the training of Jewish nurses are small, the nucleus of the staff would, it is believed, help to establish a training center for other Jewish nurses in the future.

In order to insure the insertion of communications in the current issue of THE HEBREW STANDARD they must be in this office not later than Wednesday noon of the week in which they are to appear.

The testimony of a former Roosevelt professor at the University of Berlin is to the effect that the German Emperor thinks well of Chamberlain's "Foundations of the 19th Century." This does not speak well for the Kaiser's love of justice and fair play.

The American Israelite pretends to be omniscient. A sample of its omniscience is at hand in the statement that Ha-Deror, Reuben Brainin's new Hebrew weekly, is published in London! The laws of omniscience or their Cincinnati variety, are surely in need of revision.

Not only have we a right to declare Poultny Bigelow an undesirable citizen, for high authority has spoken thus, but we may also call him a rabid anti-Semite of the deepest dye. In the latter role we may well disregard whatever he has to say about the Jews of this country.

January is quite close at hand, and that month marks the advent in London of the Rev. Mr. Mattuck, lately of Far Rockaway. He goes to take charge of the London liberal Jewish synagogue, and is expected to do much for the permanence and well being of this institution. That remains to be seen!

We are pleased to find that Boston Jewry harbors so many and such active Jewish journalistic spirits, although we are sorry for the conductors of the local Jewish Advocate. Last Friday marked the first appearance of The Jewish Weekly, a well-printed and dignified hebdomadal publication. Its allegiance is equally divided between English and Yiddish. We wish the paper long life and health!

The late Joseph Pulitzer, the well-known journalist and proprietor of The World, of this city, had very attenuated Jewish affiliations. He was the child of Jewish parents, but had married out of our faith, and his off-spring has absolutely nothing to do with this community. Still, he was an example of the successful American of Jewish antecedents, and his usefulness to the broader community served by his journal was undoubted. His journalistic motto was characteristic. It reads: "Accuracy, Terseness and Despatch."

It now appears that Colonel Roosevelt's suggestion to refer the Russian passport problem to the Hague arbitration tribunal was prompted by what ex-Ambassador Oscar S. Straus told him. This does not help the doughty former president, for his proposal, as we pointed out, is, to our mind, quite unworkable. We can well understand that Mr. Straus, a member of the tribunal, should wish to do good service to the Jews of America in such a matter, but we think the Russian passport problem will never be brought before his court for adjudication.

We can well understand why many devout Christians in this country—and the Los Angeles Times simply is one instance of an expression of their opinion—would wish to see Turkey one of these days deprived of her Palestinian possessions. The present Italian war simply gives them the hook upon which to hang such views. But, of course, if Christian might takes away the Holy Land from Turkey, the cause of this action would be the desire on the part of Christians to guard their holy places themselves. So it is with the Mohammedans, and so, equally, with the Jews. If the Zionists had a strong organization in all its aspects, behind them, it were possible for the Jews to own eventually the Holy Land. A military force would be a means of achieving this end. Under existing conditions, however, this is even beyond peradventure. With Christian, Mohammedan, and Jew, each equally desirous of being in possession of their holy places in Palestine, the continuance of the status quo in that country is very desirable. For the Turk is forced to be just to the Christian, and his overlordship of the Jew should surely be preferred by the latter to that of the Christian.

THE PROPER PABULUM!

NO wonder that in recent years the situation of Jews in the British Isles has grown steadily worse. No wonder that riots against our co-religionists break out in South Wales, or that they are attacked, as they were a few years since, in the streets of Limerick. The information that certain sections of the British press disseminates among the non-Jewish inhabitants of these countries is surely calculated to widen the gulf that separates Jew from Gentile, to cause mutual love and respect to be turned into hatred of the kind that exhibited itself against the Jew at Tredegar.

Here, in The Anglo-Celt, a small and practically unknown journal of Cavan, in Ireland, is an article by one who calls himself Arden Foster, and says he is a descendant of that Stephen Foster who wrote "Way Down Upon the Suwanee River," and other folk-songs beloved of Americans. He is writing for Irishmen and in the effort to stem that tide of Irish immigration into this country which has been both steady and continuous since the great famine of 1847. He would warn them, he blandly declares, against the intolerable conditions amid which life in this city and in other cities of this country is lived, where there are "thousands of Jews, the curse of the cities, cutting salaries and wages into ribbons!"

But this is not all! Not content with setting the Irishman at home, the natural friend of our people, against the Jew of this country, before the former even knows the latter, this ardent American, Arden Foster, in his efforts (?) to interest capital in Irish home industries, places himself on record, as follows:

In connection with all of these serious questions there is still another vital phase in Ireland to be dealt with. Every business man, every employer, every employee, has felt it, is feeling it to-day and will continue to feel it more severely as time rolls on, unless drastic laws are enacted to stifle the leperous plague that is spreading over Ireland. Even as for centuries it has cast its poisonous spawn over the face of Russia, as it is choking England to-day; as it is suffocating the North American continent—especially cities like New York, Toronto and Chicago—sapping the very life spirit of the people as the bloodsucker feeds upon human veins. I refer to a race-peril which in its fast-growing, dreadful ravage is a thousand times more pernicious, more withering, more blighting than the deadly bubo-poison of the Yellow Fever. I mean the race-peril born of the Jew. From the latest statistics, as supplied to me by the keep of the Census Record Office in Dublin, I find that the Jews in Ireland have increased during the decade by almost 1,000. You have heard of the locust. The scourge of the Israelite is worse. Unless Ireland raises her hand against it, the pest will rob her children of the very marrow of their business life. Ireland has the power to strike. England and other countries have restricted the influx of the Chinaman. Ireland can shut out the Jew. Unless she takes quick action she will find herself on the same sort of a dangerous quagmire as that which is undermining the commercial structure of Russia, London, New York, Toronto and Chicago to-day.

OH, MR. DOOLEY

WE printed the interesting satire on the social relations between Jews and Gentiles in this city, in extract at least, from the November American Magazine. This was a product of the pen of Finley Peter Dunne, better known perhaps, by his nom-de-plume of Mr. Dooley. All that Mr. Dunne writes is interesting, and beneath the veneer of humorous sarcasm a substantial substratum of moral truth resides.

In the present instance, Mr. Dunne adopts the form of a morality dialogue to preach his views, and his lesson is by no means one that Jews need avoid.

That Jews are ineligible, by the so-called standards of polite gentlemen, to membership of a dozen or more fashionable clubs in this city is but too true. That our community is composed of men of power and of substance is also true. That many of the so-called Knickerbockers in this city are the descendants of professing Jews is not to be denied, and that the socially eminent among the 400 bear the racial marks of their Jewish ancestors in their features is patent in several instances. As a consequence, the Jews have their own social clubs and have built up a clubland of their own of no insignificant proportions.

Mr. Dunne, by means of his usual fine play of wit, shows that the non-Jewish fashionable leaders of society and business are not all that can be desired when it comes to gentlemanliness. Oliver Wendell Holmes' dictum that it takes three generations to make a gentleman is just as true in their case as in ours; and in their case persecution and privation are unknown quantities. They have been verily the lords of creation, the monarchs of all they surveyed, for scores upon scores of years now.

The question, what have the Jews lost by being denied access to the fashionable clubs of Fifth avenue? is not to be lightly answered. They have lost nothing; in fact, they have positively gained by their social ostracism in non-Jewish circles. Had the Jew of New York been welcomed in Gentile society, he would long ago have ceased to exist as a Jew, and, in the face of his continual backsliding from the synagogue, his religion here would have been an unknown quantity. The Gentiles of this city have preserved our wealthy Jews for us!

We have always labored under the impression that Hallowe'en was distinctly Christian in origin and significance—the eve of All Saints' day. Apparently the Y. M. H. A., of St. Louis, is of a different opinion, for it announces its annual entertainment for Hallowe'en, and believes, no doubt, that in doing so, it is well within its rights as a Jewish organization. Most Jews are of a different belief on this subject. The organization can with propriety hold an entertainment on the last evening of October, but Hallowe'en has nothing to do with the case!

SPIRITUAL INDEPENDENCE.

אני העשירתי את-אברם:
"That I will not take from a thread even to a shoelatchet, and that I will not take anything that is thine, lest thou shouldst say, I have made Abram rich!" Gen. xiv. 23.

THERE are some texts in the Bible that seem to have in them everlasting life. They burn and blaze and sparkle. They are red-hot with the glow of some great personality, and they continue so through the ages. When they were first uttered, they broke forth with elemental might from the furnace of a godlike soul, and though many centuries have passed over them, they are still aquiver with that first flashlike impetus which has sent them on their endless journey into the heart of the generations to be.

Among these ever-quick texts I class the words of Abram: "Lest thou shouldst say I have made Abram rich!" We read them and at once we see, by their quenchless light, the figure of the speaker. Abram stands there erect—every inch a man. He does not pose. His is the majestic simplicity of one who has fought in a righteous cause, has righted the wrong and pities the wrongdoer. The consciousness of his right does not render him overbearing and cruel; he would not take advantage even of the foe he vanquished. And so when he hears the shameful imputation to him of mere monetary motives; when the robber whom he had punished offers a bribe—his whole soul rises in revolt, his native pride asserts itself in his scintillating eyes, his hand is raised in a noble gesture which is both a vow and a deprecation, while he emits the pregnant words: "Lest thou shouldst say I have made Abram rich!"

And these words became engraved upon the heart-tablets of every descendant of this generous sire, anxious to maintain Jewish pride as a precious heritage and a safeguard against evil. We oft hear the cry—for the cry never dies out—that we Jews are economic parasites, feeding upon others. We might easily retort that if parasites we be, we have been made so by unjust repression; but such an answer does not satisfy Jewish pride. When we hear the slogans of our enemies, such as: Germany for Germans, Russia for the Russians, and even America for the Americans; when articles are written in these times of ours on the "Dying Yankee," who is alleged to be supplanted and superseded by the pushful Jew—all we should say to the malevolent world is: "Let no one say he has made the Jew rich!" If we succeed in accumulating substance, it is ours. It is the reward for our toil and thrift, our honesty and industry. It is ours to enjoy as we list; yet we do not squander our money on prancing horses and dancing hussies, on riotous revelry and licentious indulgence. Our sons do not wait by the doors of foreign stages for the stars that shine only by night, our daughters are not bartered away for the empty titles of depraved courts, called noblemen I know not by what right. Our mothers have not learned the tricks that foil the benign plans of a loving God who, in His mercy, smiles through bud and blossom (and suckling babe); and our fathers provide amply for the comfort and the peace of the home, as well as the needs—social, civic and religious—of the community. And if by reason of their mode of life, members of a certain class of Americans, become effete, they have no right to brutally assault the good name of members of another class of Americans who by reason of their ideally superior lives, have always survived the storms of the ages and prospered in the sight of the Lord!

But the words of our text have a still higher meaning. They express not merely our economic independence, but our spiritual independence. The Rabbis were well aware of this when they interpreted the text—in their usual idealizing manner—to refer to the spiritual riches of Israel. They say that the words: thread and shoelatchet, allude to the ornaments of the Temple and the ready steps of the Pilgrims to Jerusalem. That is to say, the beauty of our life and worship, the devotion of our people to its religion, the characteristics of the Jewish Sanctuary and the spirit pulsating within the soul of the Jew, are original endowments of our race. It is conceded by all, even by those who deny us originality in other creative spheres, that the Jewish religious genius is original, is deeply rooted in the rich soil of Jewish life. Yes, let no one say—for no one can say—that he has made Israel spiritually rich! The truth is the other way: it is we who have made the whole world rich in the religious sense.

We might point to other spheres that have been enriched by the Jew; but our pride never feeds on the achievements of our people along other than purely religious lines. Our religion is our chief pride, our principal treasure! What shall be said, then, of and to those who, born in and professing the Jewish faith, try to import into the latter foreign ideas and strange practices, who, forgetful of our having enriched others, delude themselves into thinking that by their imitativeness they are enriching us by others? To them, too—to these wayward imitators of other faiths—let us address the forbidding call: Let no one—even within the fold—say, "I have made Abram rich!"

In the October issue of The B'nai B'rith News appears a correspondence between Sigmund Livingston, of Bloomington, Ill., who holds a relation of some sort to the Publicity Committee of District Grand Lodge, No. 6, and Dr. Lyman Abbott, of The Outlook. The casus belli was Dr. Abbott's declaration that the modern prejudice against the Jew has its origin in characteristics common to the race. Mr. Livingston's share in the correspondence is meek in language and spirit, and succeeded in evoking from Dr. Abbott a frank statement of his opinions. The following quotation from them is pertinent:

All this, however, does not prevent me from seeing that there are considerable numbers among the Jewish population of our country who render themselves offensive and bring bad repute upon their fellow religionists by pushing themselves forward, by seeking the highest and best places, not always by gentle, nor always by the most honorable, means, and by ostentatious display which attracts attention but does not win admiration from those whose admiration is most to be desired. If you say to me, these qualities are not exclusively manifested by the Jews, I answer, that is true; and if society were absolutely just, it would reserve its criticism for those who exhibit these characteristics; but society is not absolutely just and the qualities which I have mentioned bring disrepute unfortunately not only upon those who exhibit them, but upon those of their own race and religion who do not share these characteristics, and to whom such characteristics are as odious as they are to those of a different faith.

Now, a careful perusal of the foregoing extract leaves the conclusion in the mind of any reasonable man that Dr. Abbott finds that some Jews are "climbers," that they seek to "climb" forcibly and by means that may not be denominated honorable. He admits that non-Jews are guilty of the same fault, but defends society for its anti-Jewish prejudice, its opposition to all Jews, in the premises, by pleading that society is not wholly just. In short, Dr. Abbott convicts himself out of his own mouth of harboring this prejudice, for, he gives it currency in an article on the debt our civilization owes to the Jewish religion, a paper that necessarily must present a flattering picture of our race, and then, when the matter is brought home to him, takes refuge in the usual excuses of his personal friendship for the Jews, and even of his appearance in the pulpit of a "rabbi" of this city.

We think we are well within bounds if we accuse Dr. Lyman Abbott, in spite of his profession of love for our people, in spite of the fact that he is no anti-Semite, moreover, in spite of his preaching at the Free Synagogue, of being no better and no worse than many non-Jews of this country, not as well informed as he—no sincere friend of the Jewish people.

It is amusing to find the New York Herald attempting to defend editorially the Jews against the attacks of Poultney Bigelow. As we have had innumerable opportunities to point out, the Herald bears our people little or no love, and more frequently than not takes occasion to have its sorry-sings at them. But Poultney Bigelow is the crassest kind of an anti-Semite and his vapors are so un-American in character that even the Herald must cry halt to him. Then, too, the Herald feels that it is under a duty of some sort to its numerous Jewish patrons and advertisers. After all, is it too much to hope that one of these days the Herald of this city will realize its duty to the Jews of New York and to those of the United States?

If the Jewish National Fund, which the Zionists take such pride in augmenting, be the index to Zionist activity in various countries, then the followers of the Basle programme residing in this land of the Stars and Stripes may congratulate themselves. For the nine months ended with the 30th of September the American Zionists contributed nearly 63,000 marks to this fund, an increase over the corresponding period in 1910 of not quite 100 per cent. This shows that the local adherents of the Berlin smaller actions-committee are making every effort to further the cause of Palestinian development.

The orthodox Jews of Germany are bestirring themselves in these days to perfect an organization. A union of German orthodox forces has its obvious advantages and possibilities. It makes for solidarity and for a stimulus of all that can truly be called Jewish life. The German Jews of a traditional Richtung are to meet in conference during the present month, and they will no doubt arrive at conclusions which will redound to the enhanced welfare of that Jewry.

The year book of the New York Section of the Council of Jewish Women just issued is a splendid volume. Immigration, Lakeview, Public Education, The Blind and innumerable other activities are reported on most interestingly. Motion pictures are a new departure and if followed out as outlined promises to be a most important factor in Jewish education of the future. We cannot forbear from congratulating Miss Sadie American, the president of this organization. She it is who is the inspiration of the entire work, and but for her splendid power of organization, her wonderful ability for the working out of detail, her economical manipulation of time and money, it is a question whether the New York Section would be where it is to-day. Miss American has done much for Jewish womanhood, and her active brain has solved many a knotty problem.

Aping the Rich.

There have been quite a number of receptions for engaged couples and weddings in the ultra fashionable hotels, bringing together all kinds of people. Many of them never having set foot in these gilded palaces before feel awkward in their gorgeous surroundings.

It is the height of absurdity for a couple who are going to live in a small, inexpensive apartment, or tenement, after their marriage, to set out with a wedding celebration in these regal hotels. It is in poor taste for those who cannot, well—yes, very well, afford it, to launch their daughters off in the midst of lavish surroundings—such as are designed for the rich.

So with engagement receptions; it is getting quite common for those who can't afford it with ease to have these events take place in these swell hotels. These places are not designed for celebrations for the mediocrity, and the guests who attend are the subject of much criticism and fun by the waiters who are au fait in knowing who's who.

There can be no good objection offered to those who are in a financial condition to indulge in these luxuries, and to do so, and to do so is quite commendable for this class; as the expenditure of savings by the wealthy helps all trades and industries, and makes things thrive.

But for the man who struggles to

THE ONLY ABIDING RICHES

BY ARCHIBALD ROSS.

"The blessing of the Lord, it maketh riches."—Proverbs, 10:22

A very pregnant phrase, but full of truth. It augurs well for those who take the time To sift the meaning of our moral standards. For in brief space they find much of the riddle Of life evolves in grace and harmony. They delve for light, and see it, and thus prove The Gospel truth that God does speak with man. Haeckel and Darwin, Spencer and their throng Where they are wise, well merit our esteem. But when they wander far out in the mire, And hide the view of personal God from man, They act the saddest of all fools indeed.

Grasping the Infinite! No thousand Haeckels In one vast mind can solve that mighty mystery. For personality, my doubting friend, Implies no limitation when expressed Of the one Infinite and Eternal Mind— A personality that all the schools With their acumen dare not lightly touch, But pallor and confusion mark their utterance.

He who courts harmony in things diverse In mind and matter is the happiest man. He may be poor in worldly goods, but then He has riches of the moral sense, And quietly resorts to Nature's lap To watch her footprints and analogies. Be wise to-day; go back to the Old Book, "The blessing of the Lord—it maketh rich."

And parents, in your duties to the young, See that obedience first, the love of truth And honesty be planted in their minds, Before you send them to the school or worship. Train them to know God's blessing, giveth wealth, And with this increment let them go forth To do their duty in the world of labor. Give them the benefit of bracing playground, Of healthy exercise—the jubilations That nature calls for her young pioneers. For such no sorrow follows. Have good courage. This was the secret of the noble Joshua, Not like the vaporing oaths some of our senators Give out as manhood; while we, poor citizens, Drink in their badinage, and have not stamina To force them out, and look for better men.

True teachers keep Discretion as a friend, Nor will they part with her for all earth's clamor. With fortitude she gives them grace in action. They who search acmes of intelligence, With reason balancing and faith beside, Daily find paradise at their own doors— Nor poverty, nor the fell bolts of hate, Nor persecution, nor revenge will check The godlike labor. In their search for truth They make the very warp of daily things Serve as assistants—bidding every storm, Adversity, and lot defile in line. As soldiers in the army, Nature's priests, Well worthy of the title. Yes, they find Earth still an Eden, where immortal loves Throw radiance on the darkened world around, That men rise up ashamed, from their false god And hold fit place at Nature's festival.

AN IDEAL CANDIDATE.

Congressman Sulzer in nominating Julius Harburger for the office of Sheriff for the County of New York designated him as a little giant, and said that he had all the abilities qualifying him for the office, honesty, ability, and adding that he was a staunch Democrat. It can be said without fear of contradiction that no man in public life can point to a cleaner and a more unblemished record than Mr. Harburger. From the earliest day of his public career until the present time, notwithstanding he has held many and varied positions of public trust, not one breath of criticism has been uttered against his honesty and fidelity to the trusts reposed in him. There is not a blemish upon his character, nor has there ever been a reflection in the remotest degree made upon his honesty.

clerk of the Municipal Court for commendation and a paragon for others to adopt his methods of administration. While serving four terms in the Legislature of the State he added laurels to his already well known reputation for integrity and honesty, and though he was a Democrat and the Legislature he served in were during all his terms Republican in majority, by his resolute, determination and unflinching courage he saved to the State hundreds of thousands of dollars in exposing schemes in the bills offered, and which would have been passed but for the alertness of Harburger; he was feared and dreaded in the Assembly by the "black horse cavalry," and indeed the writer was present and heard the Republican leader in the Assembly (Abner) beg Harburger not to oppose a certain bill which he was about to introduce; but Harburger would make him no promise. Monday nights in the Assembly during Harburger's four terms were termed "Harburger nights," for on these occasions Harburger, in his characteristic fashion, with great boldness, would attack the Republican measures, and denounce those he thought were unworthy.

His speeches on these occasions drew large audiences to the Assembly, and on one evening the writer was present when the doorkeeper of the Assembly came to Mr. Harburger's desk, and said: "Mr. Harburger, there are two ladies present in the chamber, and they want to know whether you will speak to-night, if not, they don't want to stay." He fought valiantly in the Assembly for cheaper gas, but his bills were held with a strong clutch in the Committee on Gas and Electricity by reason of the influences, quite apparent to an observer of legislative events, Mr. Harburger determined to make an effort to get his bills out, moved to discharge considered by the Assembly itself, the Comptroller's office from 8:45 A. M. until the close of the office, devoting only the time after office hours in the conduct of his campaign. There are men, at least one of them, who are candidates for the judiciary on the fusion ticket, who look askance upon men who have adopted a public career as a livelihood, but who are themselves stretching their hands to the public treasury for public preferment. It is no disgrace, and no man should be criticized because of his service in public office. No man can well serve two masters, no business man can for any long period have an active interest in politics and become a factor in political affairs without ruin to his business, and the man who can readily recognize this and devote himself to a public career, and discard his business, should be applauded. Mr. Harburger learned this lesson early. He has devoted himself to a public career, and as already said, it has been one long succession of honest efforts to do good for the people. This is the largest factor in his selection for the nomination of the office of Sheriff, for which place those who would long for it in number are legion.

Mr. Harburger is in stature, and it may be well said of him that he is "suaviter in modo, fortiter in re"—most unassuming and modest in his ways, but mighty resolute when he is bent on accomplishing his ends. He has the courage of lion on the platform and on the stump, and he is unsparring in his attacks when he thinks them deserved. In speaking on the platform, he has the knack of bringing down his peroration upon the opponent, and he possesses the rare attribute of holding his audience, his voice carrying over the largest hall. He has great executive ability which is strongly attested by his ability to have held the leadership of his district for over fourteen years—until he recently resigned the same, which in itself is a unique incident in the history of that district. In private life he is most unassuming. He is certainly one of the best known and highly respected members of the Jewish race. For upwards of ten years he was grand master of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, one of the greatest and most important fraternal organizations in the United States. In fact, it might be said if the people of this county want a model public officer to conduct the office of the Sheriff, no truer, more faithful and thoroughly honest and capable one can be found than in the person of Julius Harburger, who has been tried and not found wanting.

passing in his race for the office of the Sheriff, no one, either in the press or on the stump, has had the boldness to bring the slightest charge against his honesty, and as every citizen, indeed it may be said with no small measure of truth, that his nomination as Sheriff came to him altogether because of these known characteristics, because of his faithfulness in public trusts, and his unblemished and remarkably clean record as a public officer, and the Democratic party may well be congratulated in having a man of such sterling parts to head its ticket—one whose character is unassailable and whose abilities have received the stamp of genuine trial in public affairs.

From the earliest days of Mr. Harburger's life—when he kept a small tailors' trimming store on Fifth street, near the Bowery, he was a factor in political affairs. His little store was the meeting ground for the political leaders of the East Side and many men who have become officials of high office, even judges on the bench of our highest court found the little "thread and needle" store of Harburger the mecca to which they turned for political preferment and advancement. It was in this place and in these surroundings that Harburger became a political factor on the East Side, and his advice and influence was sought by leaders, and aspirants for public office. And as he had a right to do, and as every American citizen is entitled to do—leaving for a time his little shop to the care of his faithful wife, he determined to enter public life and marked out for himself a public career. In the many and varied offices that he has been called upon to fill—his honesty of administration has been attested not infrequently by the commissioners of accounts of opposite political affiliations as he has been singled out time and time again, while chairman contested his motion. Thereupon Mr. Harburger in his undaunted fashion threw this charge against the chairman: "You, Mr. Chairman, are not bringing this bill back for reasons which everyone knows. Four years ago you came to this Assembly in Albany a poor man, practically without a dollar; you have been chairman of this committee during this period, and now you are the richest man in your town; you own most everything in sight, and are the largest owner of its bank. Where did you get it? You had no other visible means of support."

There was a movement to abolish the office of Coroner, and it was on the verge of accomplishment. Mr. Harburger was elected as Coroner during this controversy, and became president of the Board and held that position during his term. The records will show and it was a matter of public acknowledgment that the Coroner's office was freed from all charges and became a model institution, and no intimation of its abolition has been since heard. If the citizens of this county want an honest and faithful administration of the Sheriff's office, Mr. Harburger has the committee which held the bills for his further consideration, and have them in his experience and the ability to give it to them, for under the incumbency of that office, by Judge Erlanger, Mr. Harburger was the undersheriff, and everyone knows that a large part of the conduct of affairs rest in the undersheriff's hands, and when his term of office expired not a suit against the Sheriff was left as a legacy to the incoming Sheriff, this being an unusual condition in the affairs of the Sheriff's office.

As Deputy Comptroller of the State of New York he is equally faithful in the discharge of his duties. And though passing through a campaign for the Shrievalty, he is at his desk in the Grand Master Goldstein paid an official visit to Baron Gipsberg Lodge No. 66 last week. The members were present in large numbers, and all dues were accorded to the leader of the order.

Providence, R. I., was visited by Grand Master Goldstein last Sunday, when he called officially on Baron Rothschild Lodge No. 64. The members entertained the visitor both in the lodge room and at a banquet prepared for the occasion.

Justice Lodge, No. 26, initiated eleven young members at their last session and more are to be added at the coming convocation. The lodge is now close to the 500 mark.

Goldschlag Lodge, No. 150, added five new members by initiation at their last convocation.

Republic Lodge, No. 93, held its eleventh annual ball on the 20th ult. The affair was well attended and proved a social and financial success.

Washington Lodge, No. 38, will initiate seventeen young men at their regular November meeting.

Sinat Lodge, No. 3, at its meeting held on October 29, initiated three members and referred four propositions to committees.

Eintracht Lodge, No. 25, is reporting initiations and proposals. All meetings are well attended and officers and members are displaying activity.

Louis Dintenfuss, the endowment treasurer, is serving his eleventh term as Grand Lodge officer, and in every position he has made friends for himself and rendered valuable service to the order.

M. J. Schiff, as chairman on finance, is always elected by a unanimous vote. The delegates, in convention know how to place the right man in the right place.

New Sanitzer Lodge, No. 62, in the past six months has been quite active, continually increasing its roll of members.

Independent Zion Lodge, No. 88, reports progress in all of its affairs and the brethren are determined to keep up the good work.

INDEPENDENT ORDER BRITH ABRAHAM. United States Grand Lodge, 37 East Seventh Street, New York City.

Approved by the Insurance Department of nearly all the States in the Union. 623 Lodges. Membership, 153,000. For further information address: Leon Sanders, Grand Master; Jacob Schoen, Grand Secretary.

Dr. Adler Lodge, No. 95, holds two meetings each month, and at each session almost every member is present. The brethren believe this the proper way in which to discharge their duties.

Grand Master Sanders attended to the wants of nearly 150 members from different lodges at the office of the order on Sunday, the 29th.

Isai Abraham Lodge, 133, has issued a circular calling on each individual member to propose a candidate and the brethren are responding favorably.

Assembly of Israel Lodge, 148, located in Albany, N. Y., bids fair to outstrip all sister lodges. The wideawake members one and all are doing most excellent work, so as to be an honor and credit to the brotherhood.

Ernst Warshauer Lodge, No. 168, sends out five members weekly to hunt up fellow countrymen born in Warsaw. The results have proven beneficial to their own body and to the grand lodge.

Granite State Lodge, No. 181, located in Manchester, N. H., is an ardent admirer of the present grand officers and the members are doing yeoman service to show gains in membership. After each session they communicate the result to the Grand Secretary, and it always counts to their credit and increases the numerical strength of the order.

Emil Zola Lodge, No. 188, of Allentown, Pa., has issued a special invitation to Grand Master Sanders and as many of his colleagues as he wishes to have with him to pay an official visit, and as soon as an acceptance is received say they will paint the town red and guarantee a grand time to all visitors.

Alfred Dreyfus Lodge, No. 201, of Rochester, N. Y., is making elaborate arrangements for the next annual convention, which is to be held in the Flour City. The members say the delegates will be pleased, surprised and honored in their hearts.

Glens Falls, N. Y., where M. Bernstein Lodge, No. 203, has its home, is

7 PER CENT. PER ANNUM IN GOLD

Small Denomination Bonds Secured. Guaranteed both as to the Principal and Interest by the UNITED STATES & MEXICO TRUST CO.

France is a nation of bankers because its people are bond buyers. Everybody buys bonds in France. As soon as the Frenchman of small means gets a few dollars together he places his savings in a small bond.

Our Bond Department serves the needs of savers as well as capitalists. We are receiving subscriptions for the First Mortgage 7% Gold Bonds of the Century Investment and Building Company, which it has issued in denominations of $100 and $200.

You do not have to wait until you get $100 or $200 before you become a bondholder. You open a bond account with us for $10. You can have set aside for you any number of gold bonds that you wish and we will accept payments from you at the rate of $10 a month or $10 a week, issuing each bond to you as soon as you have finished paying it.

The security is the best on earth—real estate itself. The payment of both principal and interest are unconditionally guaranteed by the United States and Mexican Trust Company having resources of over $2,700,000.

These 7% Gold Coupon Bonds are issued by, and are a direct obligation of, the Century Investment and Building Company, of Kansas City, Mo., which has a paid in capital of $50,000,000. They are secured by a first mortgage on Seven Thousand, Nine Hundred acres of irrigable farm land thirty-five miles east of the City of Fort Stock, Tex., in the celebrated Pecos Valley.

Open a Bond Account to-day. In our foreign department you can transact business in the language of your choice.

REPRESENTING UNITED STATES AND MEXICO TRUST CO.

Singer Building, No. 149 Broadway, New York City.

making preparations on an extensive scale to do the honors to delegats and grand officers in May, next, when the Grand Lodge convenes in Rochester. Brethren will outdo themselves.

Benjamin Szold Lodge, No. 212, of Baltimore, Md., in conjunction with sister lodges in the Monumental City are so located over the fact that once again the Grand Lodge assembly will be held away from New York City that a subscription list has been opened to which over $1,200 has been subscribed to defray all expenses.

Zion Lodge, No. 221, of Indianapolis, is in the swim and no meeting passes by without candidates being proposed and initiated. They are a loyal and helping lodge for the order.

Pride of Jersey Lodge, No. 234, located in Passaic, is progressive and ever ready to increase its numerical strength. The brethren say they will never stop working until every eligible Israelite is a member of the lodge.

Norfolk, Va., Lodge, No. 248, reports that the lodge is doing its full share of the work which adds to the roll of members and gives stability and guarantees the future of the I. O. E. A. Grand Master Sanders has made them a communication expressing his appreciation and thanks.

Chairman on State of the Order Brother Blaustein is still adding to the roll of members in Premiser Lodge, No. 223. Members of the order note 325 members in this branch and a capital of $3,000. Brother Blaustein is a hustler of the right stripe. He knows what is needed and supplies it.

ORDER B'RITH ABRAHAM. (Incorporated 1859). United States Grand Lodge Office, Mutual Alliance Trust Co. Building, 206 and 208 Grand St., N. Y. City.

Fortuna Lodge, No. 71, will hold a special meeting on November 15, when all arrangements will be entered into for the purpose of purchasing a burial ground for the lodge.

Grand Master Samuel Dorf was a visitor to our sanctum sanctorum last week prior to embarking on an extended tour of the Western States. On Sunday last he was in Chicago, Ill.

At no time in the history of the order has its success been as great as it is at present. No member of the order could wish for better, and the increase is phenomenal.

A number of new lodges will be instituted in the near future, and with young people who will make most excellent collaborators.

Pine Tree Lodge, No. 509, was organized in Bangor, Me., last Sunday. This is the third lodge of the order to be established in that State.

Grand Secretary George W. Leiserson

and Endowment Secretary Oscar Wiener are now at the post of duty and make a good team for the best interests of the O. B. A.

"Busy" is hardly the word when mentioning the board of officers, who aid and assist in all work for and in behalf of their constituents. One and all are doing their level best. Every interest is taken care of by them, every duty discharged, and to benefit the ever growing brotherhood.

mediately engaged by the directors of the London Philharmonic Society, who invited Arthur Nikisch to come from Berlin to conduct the orchestra. Dr. Hans Richter, next acknowledged his great ability, and invited him to be the soloist in one of the London Symphony concerts. Within twelve months after the date of his debut, his genius had been acknowledged not only in Great Britain and Germany, but in France and Russia, where he met with a veritable triumph from the hands of his compatriots. His annual appearances in the leading European musical centres are looked upon as events, for it has been a long time since any instrumentalist has afforded the old world critics and concert goers such artistic treats as they have enjoyed since the advent of Zimbalist.

EFRAM ZIMBALIST

The latest star in the constellation of solo violinists graduated from the St. Petersburg Conservatoire, which famous musical nursery nurtured out Aileen Erlman and Kathleen Martin, is Efram Zimbalist, who made his metropolitan debut last night as soloist of the Philharmonic Orchestra, and charmed a representative audience by his playing.

Zimbalist was born twenty-two years ago in Kortov-on-Don, Russia, where his father is director of an orchestra. At the age of three, a physician was called to the Zimbalist home to attend young Efram for some infantile trouble, but after examining him, the physician was particularly impressed with the formation of his ear, and predicted not only a rapid recovery from his childish ailment but the career of a musician. Bearing this in mind, his father acquired the habit of taking young Zimbalist to listen to as many of his orchestral rehearsals as convenient.

Zimbalist did not take up the study of the violin until his seventh year. So great, however, was his progress, that within two years his father permitted him to occupy a chair with the members of his orchestra. So rapid again was his success as a player that he won in open competition with the other violinists of his father's orchestra the right to occupy the chair next to concertmeister, and like other great masters of the violin, Ysaye, Lugo Herrman, Franz Ondricek, Caesar Thomson and Jacques Thibaud, he graduated from the orchestra and was placed under the care of Leopold Auer.

He studied for six years at the St. Petersburg Conservatoire, winning at the conclusion the gold medal, donated by the Russian Government, in addition to the sum of 1,200 rubles. It was on this occasion that the examiners endorsed his diploma with the simple statement, "incomparable."

In November, 1907, Zimbalist made his debut at the Beethoven Saal in Berlin, with the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra. Scarcely had he met with his first triumphs in the German capital when he went to London for his first orchestral concert in Queen's Hall, where he was acclaimed by the English press and im-

JEWES AND SCIENCE.

By B. HOROWITZ.

Fourth Series—No. 10—Herman Schapiro

I have said in a former paper that the Jews are particularly distinguished for their proficiency in the mathematics. Among the Jews themselves those hailing from Russia stand out in the forefront in this respect. Just as the Jews have shown a keener grasp of the subject than the Gentiles, so the Russian Jew has shown more brilliancy in this direction than the Jew of any other country. What to attribute this to is hard—almost impossible, one might add. The fact remains that it is so, and we always must abide by the facts, whether we can explain these to our satisfaction or not. Some have advanced the view that our forefathers having for many a hundred years baffled with the intricacies of the "Talmud and the Targum," our minds have become sharpened to a very high degree, therefore, say these sages, the Jews shine in mathematics. Perhaps, it's hard to prove a thing isn't so if you can't replace the reason given by a better one. But that still doesn't explain why the Russian Jew should lead in the race.

Think for a moment of the vast number of these Russian co-religionists of ours who live and die without ever having been given a chance of bringing forth the "latent fire" that was written them; think of "some village—Hampten," "Some mute inglorious Milton," "some Cromwell" eking out a miserable existence somewhere within the Pale, and all because the Russian tyrant closes all doors upon him, and you can then form some idea of how much larger the list of great Jewish mathematicians (and other Jews great in other fields) would be. Why, they would dominate the world of thought! [Beg pardon, reader, if this sounds a weeny bit exaggerated. I'm a Jew and a confidently proud one; so that may account for it.]

Schapiro was born in Ernwilken near Tauroggen (Russia), in 1840. His childhood and youth were spent in mastering the Talmud in several famous Yeshivas. After obtaining the hetero-ruah he became rabbi in his native town and subsequently held similar positions in several different towns. How he came to take up mathematics is rather interesting. It would seem that an elementary text-book on geometry fell into his hands; just how it fell there is not recorded officially, but rumor has it that an enlightened rascal perceiving the stuff the young rabbi was made of thought it a heinous crime to allow such genius to bury itself in the bulky volumes of antiquated Talmud, and dexterously placed the book on geometry among the rest of the rabbi's Hebrew books. Can't we easily imagine what happened? On one occasion the rabbi wishes to consult one of his sephorim; he rummages the book-shelf but cannot find it. But in his rummaging he comes across a strange volume, a book he feels sure he could never have placed there. Who might this intruder be? He opens the front page and reads (yes, he could read Russian):

"Text-Book of Geometry, by—"
"Geometry! What's geometry?" he asks himself. His curiosity is aroused. He turns over and reads the preface. The author explains the object of the book and points out (as all authors are modest enough to do) its immense advantage over all other books of a similar character. His interest is more and more aroused. He begins with the first page dealing with certain fundamentals. He goes on and on and on. Really, this isn't so very bad; no, it's rather good. Why do some of these bigotted rabbonim say that one is damned if one reads such works? Bah! it cannot be.

Schapiro reads on and on, forgets all about time and finishes it at a sitting. He gets up as one transformed. Why, this is enchanting! How could he have lived all these years without it. A mathematician he will be, and for that purpose he will begin his study immediately.

At 28 Schapiro entered the Gewerbeakademie in Berlin, and there studied assiduously for 3 years under Aronhold. In 1871, owing to financial embarrassments, he left Germany for Odessa to temporarily engage in business. With money saved up the courageous and determined rabbi-mathematician reappeared in Heidelberg in 1878, and began to study all over again. Leon Fuchs introduced him to the higher mathematics, the grounding for which he had received from Moritz Cantor, who, together with Fuchs, was of Jewish descent.

Schapiro received his doctor's degree with highest honors, and in 1883 was made privat-docent at Heidelberg. Five years later he was made professor extraordinary. He died in 1898 at the age of 58 without having attained the full professorship. Doubtless had he lived this could not well have been refused him, in spite of the tardiness of the university authorities to show their appreciation for talent when the possessor of it happens to be a Jew.

Possessing a perfect knowledge of the Hebrew language he undertook for his first contribution to translate and edit "Mischmath Ha-Midath," a Hebrew geometry of uncertain date (Zeitschr. Math.-Phys. Bd. 25, Supplementheft, Leipzig, 1880). His knowledge of the Russian language he put to use by translating Techebycheff's Elemente der Zahlentheorie, which he published under the title "Congruenzen" (Berlin, 1889). He created two distinct chapters in mathematics—Conjunctionen and Algebraische Iteration. "Without the use of mathematical symbols," says Moritz Cantor, in his biographical sketch of Schapiro, "it would be impossible to give even a remote idea of the nature of these investigations. In 1883 he published his "Darstellung der Wurzel einer Allgemeinen Gleichung n-Grades mit Hilfe von Conjunctionen aus Potenzenreihen in Elementarer Behandlungsweise." This was to form the eighth part of a contemplated work on "Theories Allgemeinen Conjunctionen." He left behind him several thousands of pages of manuscript which were subsequently arranged and edited by Cantor and published in several bulky volumes.

Schapiro was an ardent Zionist, and the movement lost a powerful supporter in his premature death. Would that all those scientists of whom I have so far written were such Jews as Schapiro was!

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS.

Maud Powell, the only resident of this city to hold an undisputed place in the foremost ranks of the world's musical virtuosi, gave her annual violin recital Tuesday afternoon in the Lyceum Theatre. Mme. Powell offered an unacknowledged programme made up of novelties from the Italian classics, a new concerto by Max Bruch and a group of works by American composers and played them as only Maud Powell can. Mr. Walder Liachowsky was at the piano.

At Carnegie Lyceum this season there will be inaugurated a series of musical soirees designed to stimulate the ambition of pupils by acquainting them with public audiences and affording them the opportunity of displaying their talent without cost or the inconvenience of arranging a special concert. These trial concerts, as it were, will be in charge of Miss Paula Semmacher and the first will be given on the evening of November 23, 1911. Applicants will be given trial on Mondays from 11 to 1 and from 2 to 4 o'clock, and full particulars may be had by addressing Miss Semmacher, musical secretary, Carnegie Lyceum.

Miss Alma Gluck in her song recital in Carnegie Hall on Thursday afternoon, November 9, will sing a group of Mozart songs and her admirers who have heard her in the Metropolitan Opera House will be glad to hear her in this master's compositions. Encouraged by her success of last year with the Russian compositions, Miss Gluck will sing another group of these compositions in her forthcoming recital. She will also sing two of the last songs written by Gustav Mahler, and they are a fitting remembrance to the great master. Other numbers she will sing are such representative composers as Alberto Einaudi, Erich J. Wolff, etc., all of whom are entirely new and brought to light by Mr. Kurt Schindler, who will be the pianist, assisting Miss Gluck in her recital.

For Vladimir, De Pachmann's second recital at Carnegie Hall to-morrow (Saturday) afternoon, the program includes selections from Beethoven, Chopin, Mendelssohn, Schumann, Liszt and Weber-Pachmann.

Madame Betty Brooke, of Australia, made her first appearance recently at the Young Men's Hebrew Association, on a number of Australian melodies. Madame Brooke has a very pleasing personality and a voice of excellent quality and made a very strong impression upon her audience. She received a number of encores and responded by singing "Auld Lang Syne," in which the audience joined.

Music lovers will have a treat this week if they attend the exhibition of the American Land and Irrigation Exposition, which will open at Madison Square Garden on November 5. Kaltenborn's Orchestra has been engaged and will entertain the programmes giving two concerts at 3 and 8 p. m. each day.

In view of the Liszt centenary, the latest number of the Musicians' Library to come from the press of the Oliver Ditson Company, Boston, is very timely. The volume contains thirty songs by the late master, edited for high voice by Carl Armbruster. Among the selections are some of Liszt's best compositions, and the work will undoubtedly prove a popular member of the volumes heretofore issued. The volume is attractively gotten up and is issued in cloth at $2.50 per copy and paper at $1.50.

More laurels were added to those already won by Manager Amberg's German Operetta Company on Wednesday evening when "The Dollar Princess" was given for the first time in its original form. The music is incomparable, and as presented by the excellent company it was very convincing. The much of the play's humor had been lost in making an adaptation into English. "The Dollar Princess" will be given every evening until further notice. At Saturday's matinee, "Wiener Blue" will be repeated.

At Cohan and Harris' Grand Opera House, beginning Monday evening, November 6, Henry B. Harris will present Edgar Selwyn in his four-act play of the Orient, "The Arab," direct from a successful run at the Lyceum and Astor theatres. It is a play that will be remembered, is also the author of "The Country Boy."

Jamil Abdullah Azam, son of the "Arab" of powerful trim, is in love with the daughter of an American missionary in a Syrian village. The Turkish governor has arranged with Jamil's father that the Betouins shall attack the town. But the governor had not counted on Jamil's conversion to Western ideas and his love for the missionary's daughter. The governor's plans rapidly mature and everything is ready for the massacre. Jamil refuses to do the bidding of the Turk, and as leader of his people for his father has died, he restores peace to the little hamlet.

Virginia Hammond, James Seely, Edward R. Mawson, Ethel Von Waldron, Joseph Remy and Walter Wilson will be seen in support of Mr. Selwyn's "The Arab," which is one of the most picturesque plays of the season. There will be a special matinee performance of "The Arab" at the Grand Opera House Tuesday (election day), November 7.

Herman Finkelstein.
Fish of all kinds, including smoked and preserved fish form a large portion of the Jewish larder. They are eaten or served for that purpose with nearly every meal in many homes, and it is important that consumers are enlightened on the question of the source of their supplies and the persons interested in the fish-smoking industry. First and foremost among these is Herman Finkelstein, whose photograph is published above. Mr. Finkelstein has his model establishment at No. 8 and 12 Second street, the first absolutely sanitary fish-smoking house in this city, and where he is a large importer and wholesale dealer in smoked, salt and preserved fish of all kinds, making a specialty of Columbia River mild cured salmon from his own fisheries on the Pacific coast. The business has grown from a small beginning in 1894 to one of the largest and most successful in the country; the result of personal attention to details and fair treatment to all customers.

HERMAN FINKELSTEIN.
As he looks backward to his early start Mr. Finkelstein feels extremely proud of his success as he surveys the great house of which he is now the head and which was built to elevate the smoked-fish industry and to promote cleanliness in every department of the business of handling and preparing fish for human consumption, and that his efforts are appreciated is readily discernible by the fact of a phenomenal growth in the volume of his business.

The building is 25x55, three stories, with new front. Large plate-glass windows show up the interior to passers-by. The floors are cemented. On the right as you enter are handsome private offices, with open glass partitions. In the rear are the cold storage and freezers, with electric elevator to the upper floors. On the left as you enter is a large tank, ten feet long, 6x5, made of three-quarter-inch glass, containing from 500 to 750 live fish, which he makes a specialty of. Back of the tank, on shelves, from floor to ceiling, all kinds of canned, pickled and preserved fish are displayed. Marble counters run along the left side of the store, on which smoked fish are handled. Above the counters are swinging glass shelves, with all kinds of smoked fish, ready for the customer to select from. The whole store has a clean, wholesome effect. The sanitary arrangements have been carefully studied, a fine illustration of progressive ideas, which has had much to do with Mr. Finkelstein's success. Producing the best smoked fish procurable, and handled and distributed according to the pure food laws. Electric lights are used for lighting purposes. There is plenty of light and air. The upper floors are used for handling and preparing fresh fish for smoking purposes, packing and shipping; also packing and shipping preserved fish in pails, cans and such.

Mr. Finkelstein has reason to feel proud of his "Empire Brand" Glass Jar Fish, the best prepared or pickled fish on the market, and sold in a glass jar that is a useful dish in the kitchen after play is from the combined pens of Channing Pollock, Rennold Wolf and Charles J. singing and dancing choruses to the number of eighty.
There are more than 200 animals in this year's show at the New York Hippodrome, a feature that appeals specially to young folks. An entire flock of sheep is seen to saunter down the mountain-side in the Alpine scene. Elephants, camel, sacred oxen, a bull, sacred 'ebus, burros and horses, as well as dogs, form part of the many pageants that are interspersed in gorgeous succession throughout the big show. The Ballet of Butterflies is thought by many people to be the finest ever shown on the Hippodrome stage. Other features that continue to draw crowds to the big building at twice daily shows are the Desert Scene introducing a tribe of genuine Berber Arabs from the outskirts of Tunis, the great Durbar scene in the gardens of the Grand Vizier's Harem, and the Bull Ring in Seville.

CHILDREN'S PAGE.

"RABBI"

Dear Children:

The second chapter of the Ethics of the Fathers is begun by a saying of Rabbi.

What we are told of the history of Rabbi is so interesting that I am going to tell it to you.

"Rabbi" was the familiar name by which he was known to all Israel—as all Israel knew him—as the greatest Rabbi who ever lived, it was sufficient for them to speak of him as "Rabbi," and everyone knew whom they meant, they also called him, with great love and reverence, Rabenu Hakodash, which means "Our holy Rabbi."

Rabbi's real name was Rabbi Judah Hanassi (the Prince); he was a son of Rabbi Simon Ben Gamliel a descendant of Hillel, of whom I told you some nice stories, of the family of King David from the fathers side, and of the tribe of Benjamin from the mother's side.

From the time of our great law-giver Moses, to the time of Rabenu Hakodash it was forbidden to write the oral law. (I once told you, dear children, that there was a written law, the five "chumashim" of the Torah, and an oral law, which was taught orally, from lip to ear, and in order that all the Jewish scholars should forever keep on studying the Torah, and not depend on writing; it was forbidden to write down the oral law—that law without which our Torah would not be intelligible to us, and we would not know how to practice our religion). However, there came a time when the Jewish scholars could not be blamed for forgetting their studies, for the cruel Romans, with their terrible persecution of the Jews, worried them so much that they often had to think more of saving their lives than of anything else. At that time Rabbi Judah Hanassi arose, equal to the occasion, discarding all prejudices, and combating all preconceived notions, he set to work and wrote down the entire oral law, which is called the Mishna, and is more familiarly known to us as "Mishnayoth," which means teaching, repetition or studying, as it comprises all those things.

Just about the time Rabenu Hakodash was born, one of the greatest tyrants that ever lived, Hadrian, the Roman Emperor, issued a decree that no Jew should be allowed to circumcise his son. Rabbi Simon, his father, knew that to disobey this king meant instant death; nevertheless, he circumcised his son, Judah, as he owned allegiance to the King of Kings, in whose hand is the life and death of every living being, and for whose laws he was ready to lay down his life if need be.

Of course, vile informers there are at all times, and soon the cruel Roman Emperor was informed of the "terrible crime" the Jew had committed. The king could hardly believe his ears. Was it possible that any one would dare transgress his commandment? and of all persons Rabbi Simon, who was a faithful subject of the king!

The Rabbi was summoned to the king's presence, and the king spoke to him kindly, for Rabbi Simon, the Prince of Israel, had hitherto always shown himself as loyal to the emperor. "I cannot believe," said he, "that you have disobeyed my commandment; you were always loyal, besides, you know how severely I punish disobedience."

"Your royal majesty," said Rabbi

Simon, "I am a loyal subject and obey your laws, but when they conflict with the laws of my God, then I must transgress your commandments."

These words were, virtually, a confession that he was guilty of circumcising his son, yet the king wished to be further convinced by seeing the proof of it before he would convict him, he therefore sent for the mother and child.

Rabbi Simon's wife was greatly alarmed when she heard of the king's summons, but there was no way out of it, she had to appear before the king with her son, who was just eight days old. With her heart filled with trust in God she set out upon the journey, under royal guard.

And the God in whom she trusted helped her in the hour of need; as she stopped at a certain house over night, her sad demeanor aroused the kindly interest of the hostess, who asked her what trouble there was on her mind that made her so sad. With bitter tears she told her that she was bound for Rome, and that upon the Roman Emperor's seeing that she had circumcised her son she, her baby, and her husband, would all be put to death. "No, you will not be put to death," said the lady who was a noble Roman matron. "I also have given birth to a child eight days ago. Take my uncircumcised son and show him to the emperor, and leave your son with me for the present."

Arrived at Rome, she appeared with the babe before the emperor and pleaded that she and her husband were innocent of the charge made against them; and, so saying, she bared the babe and the astonished king could do nothing else than dismiss the charge against them.

The name of the Roman baby, who saved their lives was Antonius. He and Rabenu Hakodash became firm friends from their very infancy. This friendship lasted throughout their lives, even when Antonius became the Emperor of Rome he still looked upon the Jewish Prince Rabbi Judah as the dearest friend he had in the world.

PROTECTION.

"I understand that you don't speak to your neighbors."

"Not any more than necessary," replied Mr. Groucher. "Of course they are fine neighbors, but we also have a fine cook, and we don't care to have them get acquainted with her."—Washington Star.

TOO RISKY.

"We should close our eyes to the unsightly things of life."

"Too risky. I tried that once and slipped on a banana peel."—Washington Herald.

A man should be upright, not have to be kept straight.—Marcus Aurelius.

CONUNDRUMS.

Which musical instrument is the most moral? An upright piano.

What is the difference between a gardener and a Chinaman? One keeps the lawn wet, and the other keeps the laundry.

When are handcuffs like knapsacks? When made for two wrists (tourists).

Why is a dirty rug like a bad boy? Because both need beating.

Our Blanket Department Is New York's "Blanket Emporium"!

We use "emporium" in its primary sense—"the chief mart of a wide territory." also in its secondary sense, "an important trading place."... That our department fully represents both, no one can question who has ever seen the stock.

EVERY BLANKET NOVELTY—EVERY TABLE BLANKET, STAIRER BLANKETS—COUCH ROBES AND RUGS, BABY CARRIAGE ROBES—AUTOMOBILE ROBES AND RUGS, CALIFORNIA WOOL BLANKETS—

GREATLY REDUCED!

Just in time for Football games—all in college colors and with name of emblem or pennant—Yale, for instance, a true Yale blue blanket with the bulldog in white—Princeton is represented by its tawny tiger on black—Vassar and Bryn Mawr are represented—so also are Columbia, New York University, Holy Cross, Harvard and many others. Were $3.98 to $7.98. Now..... 3.97 to 4.65

Remember these are thick, closely woven and warm blankets, good for couch robes and rugs. Just the gift for college boy or girl.

AUTOMOBILE ROBES

Domestic and foreign—Chinchillas, astrakhan and crushed plushes for big open cars—fitted with foot or hand muffs or both—durable and comfortable—for handsomely appointed Limousine cars are rich broadcloth and plush robes, beautifully lined and bordered with broadcloth or leather but more silk—deep claret, coach blue and brown—Our auto robes represent very well indeed one of the principles of our Blanket Department in that they are from $3.00 to $8.00 cheaper than elsewhere.

12.98—15.98—25.98—31.98

Other Auto-Rugs as low as 5.98

BABY CARRIAGE & GO-CART ROBES

From the least expensive to the highest priced they are beautifully made—Anyone would make a splendid gift and be a constant delight because of lasting beauty as well as snug coziness—are lined—the more expensive with rich broadcloth satins.
