MARCHING TO ZION

By SAMUEL FREUDER

It was the last day of the camp-meeting held every year at Ocean Grove, the famous Methodist summer resort in New Jersey. The closing ceremony was being performed. A long procession of men, and women, young and old, tall and small, headed by a sprightly-looking clergyman of venerable age, was marching around the big auditorium, singing joyful hymns. Some of the old-timers, disregarding the modern tendency to suppress all outward show of religious emotion, would now and then shout out hearty "Hallelujahs," and, as their fervor increased, would unconsciously execute some bodily movements which came very near to dancing. But, then, did not David dance before the Holy Ark?

As I watched the animated scene from the gallery I could not help being reminded of the Hakkafot, when on Simchas Torah, the closing day of the Feast of Tabernacles the scrolls are taken from the Ark and carried around the synagogue in joyful procession.

And there rose before my mind the venerable figure of my father, holding tight to the Sefer Torah in his arms, his face shining and his eyes sparkling with joy. Once again I was trying hard to keep step with my father, and waving a little multi-colored paper flag, the material for which I had bought out of my own savings, and the Hebrew letters on which I had painted myself.

Further and further I was carried away from the actual surroundings while the thousand-voiced chorus was singing again and again this refrain of a well-known hymn:

"We are marching to Zion,
The beautiful, beautiful Zion;
We are marching over to Zion,
The beautiful city of God."

These pictures of the past were suddenly dissolved by the sounds of a whispered conversation between a young couple sitting next to me. "I wonder who that full-bearded, stockily built, foreign-looking clergyman might be?"—and she continued singing.

"Search me, dearie"—and he continued to steady her hand which held the hymn book.

"I don't care to know anything or anybody in this here place except you." The hymn book drops to the

"There he comes again. Doesn't he look like a Jew?"

"Rather. But how did he get in

"What's that? A converted Jew? Tell it to Sweeney!"

"Why, yes, dear; one who has become a Christian.

"Well, I declare! But, converted or not converted, I wish they'd all be marching to Zion or any other place near Jerusalem."

"Here your ignorance shows up again. Zion isn't a place; it is Heaven."

"Be it so. Let them all go to Heaven. America for mine!"

"Oh, you wicked man! Don't you believe in Heaven?"

"Of course I do. How could I doubt it when I look into your eyes?" And the hymn book dropped again.

A few hours later I met the subject of the preceding dialogue on the boardwalk of Asbury Park. He was walking alone. Why was he alone? Why did not a single one of the hundreds of ministers promenading on the boardwalk accompany him? Ah, here is the rub! At the religious meetings he was made much of as a fellow-worker in the vineyard of the Lord, a mighty instrument in the hands of the Lord for the preaching of the blessed gospel to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, and thousands of Christian men and women heard him gladly, in spite of his painful abuse of the English language, because they enjoyed the rare sight of a Jew preaching Christ. But the bond of sympathy between the earnest Christians and the converted Jew, which manifested itself so strongly at the meetings in the auditorium, evidently was weakened and loosened as soon as the boardwalk was reached. There the earnest Christian became again just a plain, nominal Christian in whose eyes the converted Jew is after all only a Jew.

I found him to be in a very unhappy frame of mind. Only a few months before his eldest son, a youth of great promise, had been accidentally drowned while bathing. His wife, he told me, who had come floor, and he hastily picks it up and joins in the singing.

the procession?"

"He must be a converted Jew."

SIGMUND NEUSTADT MEMORIAL BUILDING

Last Sunday the Sigmund Neustadt Memorial Building, erected at Surprise Lake by Mrs. Neustadt in memory of her late husband, was dedicated. The building, which is on the grounds of the camp maintained jointly by the Young Men's Hebrew Association and the Educational Alliance, is two stories in height. On the main floor is the kitchen, office, writing room, directors' room and an especially large and handsome dining room, at one end of which is an imposing fireplace. At the other end is a staircase, leading to the dormitory rooms on the upper floor. Huge French windows open on either side of the dining hall, letting in the ever-blowing mountain breeze; so that the 150 persons who can be accommodated in this room will always be comfortable. On the lake side of this floor is a very long and wide balcony, designed as a lounging place for the campers.

In the basement are storerooms, the bake shop, a dining hall for the younger campers, a recreation hall and shower baths.

Everything is most conveniently arranged for the comfort of the young men and boys who make use of the camp. The accommodations are planned for 200 living in tents or airy barracks.

Ample facilities are provided for baseball, tennis, swimming, boating and fishing, assuring a good time for every one visiting the camp.

with him to the seashore for a little recreation, had been obliged to return to the city, as she could not bear the sight of the ocean whose cruel waves killed her boy. In addition to this heavy blow, he suffered financially by the appearance on the scene of another Jewish missionary who suddenly bobbed up during the religious meeting just closed. This newcomer, being affiliated with the Methodist church, strongly appealed to the sectarian feeling, and succeeded in diverting from him, the Presbyterian, some of the usual missionary donations.

His torrent of denunciations directed against this rascally rival was interrupted by a sweet-faced girl of about 18 who, running up to him caressingly, said: "Pa, may I go with Max for a trolley ride?" He consented reluctantly, and she hurried away.

"Does she look like a Jewess?" he asked me, with some anxiety.

"No; she looks like half a dozen of them," I answered, somewhat irritated at his foolish question.

After a long pause he exclaimed: "This girl of mine causes me great sorrow. That young man Max she goes with is a Jew, the son of a pushcart peddler, and she will have nobody about her but him. What shall I do?"

I was relieved from expressing any opinion on this perplexing point by the approach of an old lady who, in true Methodist fashion, shook my companion's hand warmly, and blurted out: "I'm so glad to see you. Ever since I was a young girl and started to read the Holy Book I was wondering what became of the ten tribes of Israel who were led into captivity by the wicked King Nebuchadnezzar. I am sure you will be able to tell me."

"They were assimilated by the other nations," he answered readily, evidently having heard this question before.

"But how can a Jew ever become a Gentile?"

After a moment's thought he replied: "Oh, that happened under the Old Dispensation, you know." His questioner seemed to be well pleased with the answer, and departed with effusive expressions of thanks.

"What a handy thing this phrase of 'Old and New Dispensation' is! It grants you dispensation from deeper study of biblical problems," I remarked gaily, trying to cheer him up a little.

But my efforts in this line sadly failed. He had lost the precious sense of humor which has helped the Jewish race to bear up under the most adverse circumstances, and had become disgruntled, disappointed and discouraged. And yet not so many hours ago he had told in open meeting "how good the Lord had been to him ever since his acceptance of Christ," and how "peace like a river encompasses his soul."

When I told him of how the procession in the auditorium had reminded me so much of the Hakkofot, and wanted to know whether he had the same experience, he looked at me with dull and lusterless eyes, and said: "All the time I walked in the procession I was greatly troubled in my mind. Just before I got into line a lady handed me a gift of money in a sealed envelope. I could not open it without being observed, and so I was curious and anxious all the while to know how much it contained."

Thus the present rather than the past filled his mind while "Marching to Zion."

Poor fellow! He has since joined the great procession to the grave, and his soul is surely now at rest, at least as to the contents of sealed envelopes.

But why am I relating all this? Simply to amuse the reader? Not at all. What I want to get at is the sad truth that you and I, together with the most of the modern Jews, are doing exactly, though with less sordid and mean motives, what that "converted Jew" did at Ocean Grove, while the people in the gallery talk about us in a similar strain. Do we not march in all kinds of processions and sing all sorts of songs but—those of Zion? Do we not dance to every fiddle but—to the Harp of David?

And yet this "protective mimicry," as Zangwill so significantly calls it, saves us not from mockery and malice. In Germany they still hoot, in South Wales they loot, and in Russia they shoot.

Where is the remedy to be found?

The only answer that goes to the root of the matter is that given some fifteen years ago by Dr. Theodor Herzl. This great and noble Jew, recognizing the futility of all the remedies applied to the wounds of Israel, hit upon a radical remedy which would not only cure but also prevent disease. Like Daniel of old, he opened his windows toward Jerusalem, where he beheld the glory of a revived Jewish nation. Was Herzl a visionary? Yes, indeed! and so was Mazzini who had visions of Italian greatness before there was an Italy; and so was Bismarck, the unifier of Germany. Must not every great achievement be first seen in a vision before it assumes a real and actual form?

Dr. Herzl's ideas, first expressed in his book, Der Judenstaat, gave birth to Zionism, which, as everybody knows, "aims to create for the Jewish people a publicly legally secured home in Palestine."

Emerson says somewhere that every new truth has to pass through three stages before it is generally accepted. On its first presentation people simply say, "It ain't so"; a little later people say, "The Bible contradicts it"; and finally they say, "We all knew that before." Zionism, it seems, has successfully passed through the first two phases, and is now, as it were, on the home run.

There are few men of intelligence and Jewish feelings who would deny that Zionism is the key to the solution of the Jewish problem, and, if they still refuse to enlist in the Zionist movement, it is because they think that it is impossible of realization. The many objections they raise against the practicability of Zionism have been fully considered and refuted by able and learned advocates of Zionism. But there is one objection which I will mention, for the reason that by my past experience and observation I am peculiarly fitted to answer it. I refer to the argument against Zionism which takes for its ground the hostile attitude which Christians would be sure to assume against the rise of a Jewish commonwealth. Christian nations, it is asserted, will never allow a Jewish state to come into existence, and if by chance such a state should be established they would use all their influence to destroy it.

Formidable as this objection looks, it is to my mind hollow and groundless, because it is based upon an utter ignorance of the feelings of Christians on this matter. The assumption that Christians would not tolerate the existence of an independent Jewish commonwealth is absolutely false. In my contact with Christians of all sorts and conditions I have taken special pains to ascertain their attitude toward Zionism, and I have not found a single one whose Christian consciousness was alarmed or agitated in the least degree over the prospect of a re-establishment of a Jewish state.

As a matter of fact, most of the orthodox Christians believe and look for that very event as one of the things prophesied both in the Old and New Testaments. In almost all the orthodox Christian text-books used in colleges and seminaries you will find under the heading of eschatology (the doctrine of the last or final things) the future restoration of Israel to his own country. And even those Christians who, following the modern tendency, do not feel themselves bound by the letter of the Scriptures, and are inclined to take the prophecies of the Bible as mere pious wishes which may or may not be fulfilled, will certainly have no other feeling but that of gratification at the literal fulfillment of the old-time prophecies.

The only possible misgiving a zealous Christian may have in regard to Zionism is the presence in Jerusalem of the Holy Sepulchre and other time-hallowed monuments dear to every Christian heart. The plan to make all those places "ex-territorial ground," which is to be owned and controlled by an international Christian commission created for the purpose, appears to be an excellent one and well calculated to dispel all doubts and misgivings arising from this source.

But while it is true that the idea of Zionism is far from being repugnant to the Christian consciousness, but is rather in accord with Christian teachings and sentiments concerning the Jewish future, it would be nevertheless a great mistake to conclude therefrom that the Christian nations will readily support and favor it, since what Christianity teaches is one thing and what Christian nations do is quite another thing.

The Russian bear, for one, is not likely to favor Zionism, and it may take a little sharp prodding in his sides to make him release his paws from the throats of his victims. It is recorded of old, "And the children of Israel went up armed out of the land of Egypt," and the modern Jew may have to fight his way out of Russia. Yes, "Marching to Zion" will probably be somewhat more strenuous than the walking down the gang plank of a well-appointed steamer for Jaffa. But what of it? A people that is not willing to fight for liberty will never be free.

Who knows but that the brave young Russian Jews who now risk their lives in the cause of Russian freedom will at last realize that they can serve the cause of freedom best by fighting their way out of the enemy's country into the land that is waiting for her own children to come back, build up the waste places and make it blossom as a rose?

The Chosed's Courtship

By "EMILERNESTINA."

"When I recall those days, it's certainly all very funny. Talk of your Chinese customs! Talk of the various customs prevalent among barbarous nations! I tell you, our Galician 'Chosedin' have just such queer notions. But then, you see, when all this happened to me I knew no better, and thought that it had to be so."

So spoke the Wandering Jew after many years of "trial and tribulation." He continued:

"You see, I had been brought up like many another of my own race and in the same station in life. In those days—and to a certain extent it's true to-day, too—unless you came from a very poor family, you would be brought up as a 'Yeshiva Bocher,' which was an excellent way of doing everything possible to make you absolutely unfit for earning your own living in after life. From early morn till late at night, the whole livelong day, we would be grinding at our Gemmorah, and we would continue the grind till fit for the next step in life—marriage. Any trade? Any profession? Were we then of such common stock as to become bootmakers or tailors? And to study 'Goyish' knowledge—that was sin, indeed. So after the 'Beth Hamedrish,' and after the marriage, and after three or four years' residence with the father-in-law, we were cast adrift to shift as best we could, and we usually managed to starve right royally.

"You want me to tell you about my vicissitudes? My courtship? My marriage? Ha, ha! That was funny. "When I reached my twentieth year the 'shadchonim' got busy. They belabored father with all sorts of offers, and he listened to all very gravely. I—I didn't know what to think of it all. A woman was a vague thing at best. I had never spoken to any strange girl, and when once or twice I tried to look at one I feared the wrath of the Almighty would overwhelm me. And so I tried to think of 'Shas,' and prayed very hard not to be led into temptation. But marriage, I was always given to understand, was a necessity. No questions were to be asked; it was 'but to do and die.' Therefore it was with an air of resignation that I went with father to 'look over' a young specimen. Understand, I had no say in the matter. It rested entirely with my father and the 'specimen's' father. If they could come to terms, all well and good. I had a peep at this belle, a child of thirteen. It surprises you? That's considered quite a reasonable age. She was a dirty little thing, was that prospective bride, and I instinctively disliked her; so much so that I swore—heavens!—that I would never—heavens! heavens!—marry the little shrimp. Fortunately, the two elders could come to no agreement, and I had therefore no occasion to put my unheard-of audacity to the test. "Our next attempt was equally barren of results, and so was the third, and the fourth.

"To examine the fifth candidate a long journey had to be undertaken. But when we reached our destination I wasn't sorry that we had undertaken it. I adored the girl from the very first moment. Oh, she was the sweetest thing you've ever seen! "But it wasn't an altogether straight path for me. I had plenty of obstacles to overcome. The first glance I had of the girl made me wish to see her continuously forever afterward. But there were several things that kept us apart. First, there were difficulties in the way of a satisfactory money settlement—the 'naddan.' Then, again, it was considered altogether unbecoming for a 'chosed' to see more of his bride-to-be than was absolutely necessary; and that meant seeing her hardly at all. But what was worse than either of these was the fact that the young lady was so terribly shy—extraordinarily so, even for a girl.

"When on my first visit we were first ushered into the sitting room, and there found her busily engaged in sewing, she no sooner espied me than she dropped what she had been working on and rushed out of the room; and that day I saw her no more.

"For the first time in my life that restlessness which takes hold of us when we are in love took hold of me. It surprised and frightened me. I had been taught from the very earliest years that to think of woman was sinful, and I had avoided her with a scrupulousness that reflected no little credit upon my instructors. But now I seemed to be doing nothing else but thinking of a woman. Try hard as I might, the thought of her forever recurred to me. And I began to feel that I was rushing into an abyss, and that nothing but shame and sin would come from it.

"Several days passed, and nothing definite had yet been reached. That negotiations were being carried on I was aware of, but as to their exact nature I hadn't the remotest idea. And, indeed, seeing that I was the one most interested, I suppose it was only appropriate that I shouldn't be consulted at all.

"But this uncertainty was wearing on my nerves more and more daily. As a dutiful son, and in strict accordance with propriety, I had not as yet referred to the matter. But I could no longer withhold from asking my father, which I did, as you might well expect, in the most awkward manner possible. My father gave me the strangest stare I have ever seen him give me, and for fully a minute didn't utter a word. I felt that I had committed an unpardonable blunder, and that no punishment would be too severe for such a course of action. Fortunately for me, my father was not altogether the kind of man I thought he was. True, he was a 'chosed,' but he was not so fanatical as not to be somewhat of a man of the world, too. All this he explained to me later, but at the time, as I say, I hadn't come to know him in that light.

"What's the matter?" he at length said.

"The matter? What should be the matter? I haven't any time to waste, and I feel that I'm wasting my time here."

"It seemed to me that I noticed a faint glimmer of a smile as he replied: 'Well, we're going to leave for home to-night.'

"This was far from the news I expected; it was the kind of news that was least pleasing. I began to play restlessly with the leaves of a volume of 'Shas' before me. Without daring to look at my father, I remarked in as offhand a manner as I could: 'And so nothing has come of it?'

"Again methought I noticed that roguish little smile as he replied: 'What's the difference to you?'

"The difference to me! My God! How could I explain to him that it meant all the difference in the world to me? How could I tell him that life and death depended upon it? "

"So you're going?" I blurted out.

"What else remains to be done? "

"Nothing, I suppose."

"Then we had better be going."

"I suppose so."

"Quiet once again, both of us absorbed in our respective books; at least, to all appearances.

"And now we shall begin hunting all over again?" I ventured.

"My father looked at me intently.

"What's the matter with you to-day? "

"Nothing at all, except that I am tired of traveling around and forever examining and being examined."

"But it's quite impossible to come to an agreement with the very first one, for more than one reason. Patience, my son. You must have a helpmate worthy of you."

"Must I then get married? Let me alone for another few years."

"Very well, then," said my father, after another good look at me, "it shall be as you please."

"But this decision was not to my taste at all, and I was conscious of having blundered still more miserably.

"What was the trouble now?" I asked, in as unconcerned a tone as I could muster.

"The trouble? "

"I mean, why couldn't you come to an agreement with the party? "

"Why this interest? "

"Interest?" I shrugged my shoulders.

"He smiled visibly. That annoyed me, and I felt the blood mount to my face. I was beginning to suspect that he could see through me and my motives. Nevertheless, I continued:

"Money again, I suppose? "

"Not at all."

"What then? "

"Without answering he suddenly

It places at their disposal the kind of knowledge that is useful to them in their struggle for a livelihood. It fits them for good citizenship, it seeks to make them straightforward, self-reliant, honest, independent."

Elijah the Prophet

(Translated from the Yiddish of M. Melammed in the Jewish Volk, New York.)

There was once upon a time a poor little urchin named Welvel, who in addition was called "the lame," having broken one of his legs while engaged in a foot race one bright morning. He was fourteen years old at the time of this narration, although he looked much younger, owing to his small stature, ill-nourished body and bent back, the latter resulting from his unfortunate mishap.

His father, Simon the beadle, was very indigent and unable to pay for the boy's education or instruction, secular, religious or professional. Because of this Welvel walked the streets all his days and even in some watches of the nights eking out an existence by helping tourists and travelers with their baggage, bundles and parcels, and bringing home a few coins as a help towards the support of the family.

Leaning against a telegraph pole stands Welvel one morning, his hat down over his eyes, as a protection from the rays of the blinding sun. Welvel looks time and again in all directions, wondering whether his services will ever be wanted and his help required. The morning passes, the midday and the afternoon following, the evening almost approaching, without any prospect of a job. Hungry, thirsty, careworn and tired, Welvel dreads the idea of going home with nothing in his pocket, knowing full well that there is neither a morsel of food nor a crust of bread in the parental house; this being Thursday, when the mother is generally in a bad mood, lacking the means and wanting the money for the purchasing of food for the Sabbath. He, therefore, sticks to his post, hoping against hope that some late comer will appear on the scene, just for the mere sake of giving him a chance to earn a few coppers, the very thoughts of which make poor Welvel gleeful.

There came an old man, walking very slowly with a heavy pack on his shoulders and beckoning to him pleadingly, with eyes full of tears. Welvel, however, became quickly disappointed at the sight of the wretched individual and his ragged luggage, hesitating as to what position should he take, the man being, apparently, in as bad fix as his own father and the charging of money for carrying his bundle might be almost criminal. He became somewhat alarmed as the man advanced closer, and cursed his misfortune, for the painful experience added fuel to his pensive disposition and melancholic situation. He shut his eyes, endeavoring thus to avoid the man, baggage, misery and wretchedness. The traveling man, on the other hand, put his burden on the ground, mopped off the sweat from his face with the corner of his sleeve and gently tapped Welvel on the shoulder, saying with a voice of pathos and emotion: "Do you want to perform a Mitzvah, which will save you, indeed, from fasting on Yom Kippur?"

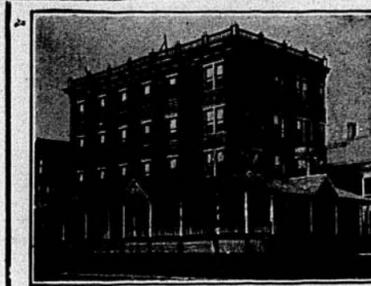

"Well, what is it that you want me to do?" questioned Welvel, purporting not to grasp the wanderer's hints and suggestions.

"I want you to carry my parcel to the railway depot. I am old and feeble, unable to do it myself, have no money to pay you for the job, but I am sure you will be rewarded by God Almighty, turning rich and prosperous, while your father and mother will share pleasures and participate in your rejoicings."

Welvel is confronted with a peculiar dilemma, not knowing what to do under the circumstances. Of course, he knew that one must needs exercise passion and compassion, which are duly compensated by God Almighty; at the same time he finds no cause or reason for God's ill-treatment of himself and parents, suffering them to remain without food, drink and substantial supplies. He thinks he transgresses God's precepts by failing to aid the old man, but is inclined to follow suit, perhaps for the very reason of increasing God's anger, so as to get even and repay with the very coin, foodless, helpless and God-forsaken, Welvel would forsake and never help the poor, old and feeble man.

The latter, however, still stands close to Welvel, bent, stricken and worried, wondering what to do next. He speaks no more, neither does he move his lips, nor does he utter a syllable; his eyes

NEWS FROM ENGLAND.

(Exclusive Correspondence to THE HEBREW STANDARD.)

Federation of Synagogues Chooses a Chief Minister—His Career—Fears that the Appointment May Increase Division in the Community—Creation of Two More Jewish Knights—Jewish Educational Successes at Cambridge University—A Woman Mathematical Genius—Zangwill's "Melting Pot" Produced in London in Yiddish—Legal Sufferings of Jews in Russia.

London, June 21, 1910.

The Federation of Synagogues on June 16 installed the Rev. Dr. M. Jung as its chief minister, the ceremony taking place in the presence of the chief officers of the Federation, including Lord Swaythling and Herman Landau. The appointment has been criticised extensively, but in no way disrespectfully, to Dr. Jung. He is a fine Talmudist and classical scholar. For twenty-two years in Hungary he was rabbi of the congregation of Ungarisch Brod. He attended great Yeshibas in his native country, that of Rabbi Samuel Ehrenfeld, and later that of the well-known Rabbi Moses Schick at Chust, and finished his Talmudical studies at Pressburg under Rabbi Simcha Benjamin Schrieber. He then received his rabbinical diploma from Rabbi Salomon Spitzer. Besides his Talmudical studies he attended the Gymnasium and afterward went to Germany, where he studied at the Marburg University. He entered Leipzig University, where he received his degree of doctor. In 1888 he became Klaus Rabbiner at Mannheim (Baden). At Ungarisch Brod he founded a gymnasium for the study of Latin and Greek and also established a Yeshiba for the study of the Talmud. In Bukovina he founded a combined gymnasium for the study of both Hebrew and secular subjects.

With such experience and endowments he is regarded as a man well equipped to handle the problems that will beset him in this country. He is also credited with zeal and enthusiasm and with being a stern and resolute administrator. Press and community criticism, therefore, is never directed against him personally. The discussion concerns itself with the alleged unfortunate position of the Federation of Synagogues in being ruled from the tomb. In other words, the present state of affairs is said to be the result, not of the united opinion and efforts of the members of that body, but the legacy of an individual, the present Lord Swaythling's father. Those who believe in the closer union of the East End and West End sections of the Jewish community in London and the country generally are of the opinion that this appointment of a chief minister particularly for the East End synagogues will be a means of creating discord and dissatisfaction and keeping the two sections still further apart.

The Rev. Avigdor Chaikin, until now, has been the head of the Federation under the title of rabbi and minister. Born in Russia in 1877, he served as rabbi of the Russian Jews in Paris and elsewhere, coming to London in 1901. He is the author of several learned works and for years has served the Federation with earnestness. He is a profound scholar, enjoys good health and is yet far from being an old man. His supersession, therefore, will also arouse much unfavorable comment.

In the meantime the movement toward the appointment of a Chief Rabbi of the whole community proceeds. The synagogues will soon be engaged in choosing delegates to represent them at the election, and many important members of the community are seeking nomination.

In addition to the Jewish honors mentioned last week in connection with the King's birthday two more have to be recorded. Charles Waldstein and Marc Aurel Stein both received the honor of knighthood, which entitles them to put "sir" before their names. Sir Charles Waldstein was born in New York in 1856, and is a well-known Anglo-American archaeologist. In 1880 he became lecturer on classical archaeology at Cambridge University and two years later university reader. From 1883 to 1889 he was director of the Fitzwilliam Museum, and in 1883 he was made a fellow of King's College. He was called to Athens in 1889 as director of the American School of Classical Studies, which office he held until 1893, when he became professor at the same institution. Returning to England in 1895 he was appointed Slade professor of fine arts at the University of Cambridge, and he held this chair until 1901. Sir Charles is a voluminous writer. Among his most notable works is "The Jewish Question and the Mission of the Jews," which was published in 1889. In 1909 he wedded the widow of Theodore Selligman, of New York.

The second new knight, Sir Marc Aurel Stein, was born at Budapest in 1862, and is chiefly known for some very important archaeological explorations in Kashmir and Chinese Turkestan. In 1888 he was appointed registrar of the Punjab University at Lahore, and principal of the Oriental College in the same university; eleven years later he became principal of the Calcutta madrasah, where he remained until 1901. He has also acted as inspector of schools in the Punjab. The results of his explorations have been communicated to various learned societies, and he has written numerous articles in Oriental journals.

Other Jewish honors are reported from Cambridge University, one of England's two principal seats of learning. Jewish students have secured no fewer than eleven first-class passes in the Tripos examination, which is a record for the community. Furthermore, among the wranglers this year—that is, among those who have attained a first-class in the public mathematical honor examinations, three members of the community figure, one being a lady, Miss E. R. Behrman.

Miss Behrman's success is the more notable in that she has only been in residence for two years. She is a graduate of South African College (University of the Cape) and was top of South Africa in mathematics. Last year she obtained a second in Part I. of the Mathematical Tripos. She is the first wrangler from Newnham since 1908. There was only one other woman wrangler this year.

Zangwill's four-act play, "The Melting Pot," which had such a successful run in America a few years ago and was hailed by Mr. Roosevelt (then President) as a dramatic masterpiece, has just been produced at the Yiddish Theatre in the East End. That "The Melting Pot" has never been staged in England before is rather surprising, for from the dramatic point of view it is perhaps the most finished work that Mr. Zangwill has achieved as a playwright, though, like some of his more recent stage productions, the progress of the action is lumbered by the intense rhetoric. Mr. Zangwill has achieved a compelling piece of work, and worse might be done than to put it on the English stage. The performance in Yiddish was quite satisfactory.

A pamphlet just issued here under the title of "The Legal Sufferings of the Jews in Russia" and edited by Lucien Wolf, makes as painful reading as the darkest chapters of Motley's "Dutch Republic." It is not a story of bloodshed, but of a persistent, ruthless attempt to ruin spiritually, morally and materially some six millions of people by a code of legal procedure and illegal restrictions which recalls the Penal Code against the Irish Catholics. The body of the pamphlet is a dispassionate analysis of the law and the law's administration, all the more terribly effective because of its renunciation of rhetoric and its strict occupation with facts.

The preface by Professor Dicey sums up with admirable clearness and with a vigor which does credit to his humanity the facts detailed in the pamphlet, facts which evidently were a revelation to him and which are unknown to most Englishmen.

The restrictions on Russian Jews are classed under seven heads—the army, the service of the State, the service of corporations, education, the liberal professions, the right to own property and the right to residence. The "blood tax" is heavier upon Jews than upon non-Jews, for they are compelled to furnish from 20 to 35 per cent. more soldiers than their due proportion. Nevertheless, a Jew cannot be an officer, an army surgeon or even the conductor of a military band. A Jewish soldier cannot take his furlough outside the Pale, even though his regiment be stationed outside the Pale. The Jewish family alone is fined $150 if a born Jew, even though he be dead or even though he has abandoned Judaism, fails to report himself for military service.

Throughout the Russian public service there is hardly a single Jew, and that includes not only the civil service, the Bench and the Treasury-Bar, but the railways and the universities. No Jew can vote for a town councillor or be elected one, although in many towns the Jews form a majority of the population. The Governor may appoint Jews to the number of one-tenth of the corporation, and his appointments are usually a worse scourge than no representation at all. No Jew may be a member of a county council or foreman of a jury or president of a school board, and his membership of Stock and Produce Exchange is limited to a small fraction, even where the commerce is almost entirely Jewish. The percentage of Jews in the higher and secondary educational institutions to which they are admitted at all is limited to 10 per cent. in the Pale and 5 per cent. elsewhere. The number of Jewish pupils in the secondary schools has been cut down by half since 1894, although the hunger for education has grown infinitely stronger. In the strictly Jewish schools, run by Jewish money, the teaching of Russian is actually forbidden. Only a fraction of the Jews who get through the secondary schools are admitted to the universities, and a decree of M. Stolypin's shut the universities to 50,000 Jewish lads.

For fifteen years no Jew has been admitted to the Russian Bar and a regulation is now being worked out which will make it almost impossible for a Jew to acquire the lower legal grade. Since 1882 no Jew may buy or rent land outside the towns of the Pale; he cannot, therefore, become a farmer. Many companies can have no Jewish shareholders and a Jew cannot mine coal in Poland or exploit oilfields in the Caucasus. With the exception of a handful of the specially privileged, no Jew may live outside the Pale or in the rural districts of the Pale. The result is a terrible congestion in the towns, with a poverty such as Western Europe cannot dream. What this restriction means may be gathered from the fact that prostitutes are one of the few classes who have freedom to reside where they will. Jewesses have been known to take the prostitute's passport in order to be able to study, only to be prosecuted by the police for not carrying on the prostitute's calling. And these regulations are made infinitely worse by their vagueness and their liability to arbitrary interpretation, which subject the Jews to the caprice of a venal and persecuting police.

What has been sketched is only a fragment of what is set out in this pamphlet. "Russian statesmanship," in Professor Dicey's words, "forces Russian Jews to make a choice between exile on the one hand and on the other hand either ruin or what is still more terrible, the permanent degradation of every Jew who inhabits the Russian Empire." It is not really a choice, for the gates of the lands of refuge are being closed upon the Jew. The lot of the Jews of Russia is bitterer than the lot of their ancestors in Egypt.

Only two short months separate us from the high holidays! It is a pity that the vacations of the Reformed Rabbis will end so soon!

The annual convention of the Federation of American Zionists this year seems to have made less stir even than usual. Algebraically, of course, one can speak of minus zero.

Rabbi Simon R. Cohen, of Brooklyn, has the courage to publicly state his unwillingness to continue as a member of the Eastern District Council so long as it remains other than a purely local organization. With such a defection it will be surprising to us if the Eastern District Council can live!

We are pleased to note the reappointment of City Magistrate Moses Herrman for a term of ten years by Mayor Gaynor. Mr. Herrman, in his previous term of service, made an enviable record for impartiality and judicial ability, and we are sure he will duplicate this in his second decade as a magistrate.

We have always advocated and thoroughly agree with The American Israelite, that so long as the B'nai B'rith continues to be a secret order, it will not take its proper place as a world-wide organization for the weal of Jewry. "The secrecy of the B'nai B'rith order is the merest pretense." The order does not need to veil its doings behind and beneath an oath of secrecy. Its objects should be known by all men, and Jews who value their name as Jews will then have no reasonable excuse for not throwing in their allegiance with it.

The Republicans in their platform did not avoid all references to the abrogation of the treaty of 1832 with Russia. The Democrats, fortunately for them, gave it more space. What the "third party," headed by that redoubtable friend of the Jews, Colonel Roosevelt, will do remains to be seen. The colonel is a consummate politician, and as there are many Jews who have votes at the coming election, and as their votes count just as much as those of any other equal number of American citizens, the Roosevelt party will presumably not be found wanting. It will be curious thus to find a question of Jewish interest the bone of contention for progressives and reactionaries.

Mary Antin, having refurbished the story of her early life at great length "to point a moral and adorn a tale," cannot resist the temptation to preach to the readers of her latest work. She tells us that sometimes when the immigrant adopts this country as his home and his own, it is not so much that the country has adopted him as that he has adopted the country. Epigrammatically, this sounds well, but practically it does not ring true. Any individual immigrant who becomes a citizen of the United States, no matter how gifted he may be, does not put the nation in his vest pocket. Nor do a large number of immigrants, having these qualifications, do this. That America has been influenced by the arrivals from foreign lands on her shores is indubitable, but the process required centuries for its completion, and is not even quite completed now.

Dr. Isidore Singer, to whom we referred at considerable length in this place a week ago, has just issued in pamphlet form two papers written by him which originally appeared in The North American Review, of this city. They treat respectively, of "The Future of the Papacy" and "The Attitude of the Jews Toward Jesus," and call for no comment. Both essays are of a piece with Dr. Singer's recent Independent article. We have here the same oblique point of view of Judaism, the same exaltation of Dr. K. Kohler and the other leaders of the ultra-Reform school in this country as the greatest scholars et ad nauseam. Dr. Singer prefaces the reprint with the story of his life in brief. This has all the earmarks of his becoming modesty. Thus we are told that "The Jewish Encyclopedia" stands as "a credit to the publishers and its editor."

INEXPLICABLE

WE are surprised, to put it mildly, that Rabbi Dr. Philip Klein, the chief spiritual guide of the orthodox First Hungarian Congregation Ohab Zedek, of this city, should sanction the action of his synagogue in taking up tickets of admission to services on our holy Sabbath a fortnight ago, at which Rev. Joseph Rosenblatt, the celebrated cantor, conducted the prayers.

Does not the Rev. Rabbi know that the issuance and acceptance of such tickets of admission are a direct violation of the sanctity of the rest-day? What plea in extenuation of this action can he advance? To take up such tickets from attending worshippers at a regular Sabbath service is a distinct desecration of the day, and is not countenanced by our ceremonies and traditions.

Rabbi Dr. Klein would probably be the first to condemn the performances of chazanim on the public concert-stage both here and abroad. Is it not just as much a "performance" where tickets are required to admit to a service persons who desire to worship God? Is it not just as much of a travesty of Judaism for an orthodox congregation to insist on tickets of admission being presented by congregants on the holy Sabbath as the rendition of our sacred chants and melodies before an audience, instead of a worshipping assembly of Jews and Jewesses, even if this be regarded as "the greatest event in the history of American Judaism"?

Latterly, the sacred office of the chazan has suffered much in loss of repute. A singer may have the right to give publicly such songs as he can, or knows he can, sing well. But when he offers songs which have a spiritual significance in the manner of those to whom that spiritual significance is an ever-present reality, it is high time that right-thinking Jews protest against such "performances."

There is no difference, we repeat, between a "performance" of the nature of the one just referred to and one within the walls of the sacred edifice, for which tickets of admission are required.

The cable dispatches to the dailies of our city have in the past few days referred to the coming election of an English chief rabbi by the United Synagogue and the constituent electors of London. Names are mentioned, and one notes with gratification that two local rabbis of thorough orthodoxy, of admittedly transcendent learning and of general excellent reputation are included in the list of probable candidates for the post. Naturally, the reference to any rabbi as a candidate for election to the chief rabbinate is altogether different from his eventual selection for that great office. The latter remains in as much obscurity and indefiniteness as ever. But we think we begin to see the commencement of the end, the final scene of the dramatic task of choosing a successor to the late Dr. Hermann Adler.

With the usual blare of trumpets it was announced in the public prints last week that Rose Harriet Pastor Stokes, the former "daughter of the Ghetto" who now is the wife of the millionaire Socialist, would support the striking boycott against the kosher butchers of Philadelphia. This is in line with the activity of that lady in the recent past, for, whenever there is a strike, or a boycott, or a contest by organized labor or the laboring class, Rose Pastor Stokes immediately throws herself in the limelight of publicity on the side of the "oppressed." Her inordinate desire to right the wrongs of the ill-treated laboring class is only exceeded by her anxiety to be sure that her name will figure as their "savior." And yet, what has Mrs. Stokes, despite her efforts to "butt in," accomplished for her down-trodden "brethren?" Take the recent waiters' strike in this city. Here was a cause that would and did appeal to her. She promptly offered herself to the strikers as their "leader," contributed nothing in dollars and cents to their treasury—she never accords financial aid in similar cases, but only "tall talk"—and the result was that the waiters who struck are beggared and thrown upon the general community. In the case of the waiters Rose Pastor Stokes did as much as Theodore Roosevelt accomplished at the Baltimore convention! And yet she wishes to figure as a philanthropist! Mrs. Stokes, you make us very, very tired!

The president of the Eastern District Council of Reformed Rabbis has written a public letter in which he sets forth the position of his organization with respect to the recent disapprobation of it by the "annual picnic." One sentence in this letter gives one food for thought! We there read: "The Eastern Council was formed to deal with pressing Jewish problems peculiar to the East and where Reform is being undermined and its interests brushed aside." What pressing Jewish problems are peculiar to the East? What pressing Jewish problems peculiar to the East can the Eastern Council deal with? Is Reform being undermined here in the East? Are the interests of Reform in this section brushed aside? And by whom? The president goes on to indicate who the enemies of Reform in the East are, and states: "Numbers, brains and means are being pitted against it (Reform) and enthusiastically directed toward a neo-nationalism and toward what has been styled a counter-reformation." Das also ist des Pudels Kern! The Eastern District rabbis are troubled by the counter-reformation, instead of by orthodox Judaism triumphantly marching forward, and therefore they allow themselves to be caught between the upper millstone of the "annual picnic" and the lower one of their natural opponents. We sit back and await developments. We are patient spectators, ready to behold the further antics of a number of reverend gentlemen who seem to have an insensate desire to contribute their mite to the gaiety of nations.

THE GRAND SYMPHONY OF JEWISH LIFE

פינחס בן אלעזר בן אהרן הכהן השיב את-חמתי מעל בני-ישראל בקנאו את-קנאתי בתוכם:

"Pinchas, the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron, the priest, hath turned away my wrath from the children of Israel, while he was zealous for my sake among them."—(Num. xxvi., 11.)

TWO master-spirits of the Jewish people are presented to us this week—the first of the period of national mourning known as Three-Weeks—in the Sidrah and the Haftarah respectively. The Sidrah brings before us the figure of the valorous Pinchas, the Haftarah that of the wailing Jeremiah.

Pinchas and Jeremiah—what a contrast! What a striking contrast is there between the tendencies they represent! Pinchas (identified in legend with Elijah) the vindictive, the zealous and jealous for the Lord's sake; he who does not mince words nor waste time, whose sword is readier and more pointed than his tongue; who acts sturdily while others stand aghast "weeping before the door of the tabernacle," is thus placed side by side with Jeremiah, the visionist, the dreamer, whose whole strength "lies in his mouth"; the man who wrings his hands continually, whose very name stands for unfathomable despair, who has made of weeping an art in which no one has ever excelled him.

Pinchas and Jeremiah! How different the keynote sounded by each of these worthies! No minor prophet Jeremiah—but a prophet in minor! Contrast the dominant minor note of Jeremiah's prophecies with the militant note of Pinchas' action! Pinchas and Jeremiah—the major and the minor note, the voice of triumph and the wail of tribulation!

Pinchas and Jeremiah—our strength and our weakness! We read the wonderful tale of both and we love both. Different though they be, nay, altogether opposite in character—we are inspired by both to a like degree. We rush forward with the bloody impetus of the one, we grovel in the ruins of our glory in the sack-cloth of the other.

You ask, How is this possible? You ask, Have we two souls that animate us but that know each other not? Have we a working soul and a weeping soul? Are we two-in-one? Truly, I know not how to answer you. Many before me have tried and failed to explain the Paradox of the Jewish Soul.

All I know is that in the grand symphony of Jewish life the major and the minor note are blended together in an indissoluble harmony. In this harmony neither note can very well be missed. Take out the Pinchas-note, or silence the Jeremiah-note, and what remains—will not make good Jewish music!

All this means that the Jewish type is a composite of Pinchas and Jeremiah. You cannot repudiate either Pinchas or Jeremiah without stunting the type. This is the combined teaching of this week's Sidrah and Haftarah. It is the lesson of the Three-Weeks.

Now our so-called "enlightened" brethren do not heed this lesson. Theirs is the consistent effort to eliminate the minor note from Jewish worship and Jewish aspiration. These proud "emancipated" Sons of the Age, who strut in the broad daylight of the present, scorn the soft whimpering plaint that issues forth from the long Goluth-night. Not for them the Three-Weeks! Not for them the mourning for Zion and Jerusalem! Not for them the prayers for our national restoration! Away with the tears and the ashes and the sack-cloth! Away with everything that sighs have sanctified! Away with every custom sealed with the martyr's blood!

"Away, away"—they say—"we will neither groan nor grovel! All life smiles around us, why should we sorrow? The tendency of the age is to eliminate everything that makes for weakness, for soul-contraction, and encourage everything that makes for strength, for expansion; why then should we allow our soul to shrink and shrivel beneath the sting of sadness? Why yearn for any other freedom than the freedom legally assured us? Zion? Jerusalem? Palestine? Nationalism? Hebraism? Are they not the cries of weakness, of black pessimism? Is there any room to-day and here for the minor-note? Are we not strong and free and broad? We will have none of the Jeremiads of the Past! Ours is the Song of the Future!"

What shall we reply to these and similar outbursts? Arguments are hardly of any use. Arguments but breed arguments. Reason may range itself easily on both sides of any question. But Feeling, but the Soul, can neither cheat itself nor deceive others. And the Jewish Soul answers simply: The Song of the Future—all in major—may be a very fine song, but it somehow does not make good Jewish music!

The rabbis well understood the mystery of the Jewish Soul and of Jewish life when they said: "He who does not mourn over Zion Desolate will not live to see Zion Comforted." Is not the meaning of this plain? He who eliminates the minor note eliminates the major note. He who eliminates Jeremiah eliminates Pinchas. He who would not listen to the First Isaiah, for him the Second Isaiah has no comforting message. He who denies our weakness knows not our strength. His soul is too crabbed to take into itself the contradictory completeness of the Grand Symphony of Jewish Life!

and lasting, and Colton truly says, "I will show you a ton of perfect pain, with greater ease than one ounce of perfect pleasure." There are innumerable people who believe themselves to be happy, but they do not know what happiness is, though it is contended by some writers that the man is happiest who believes himself happy.

It is not given to mortal to be truly happy. What he calls happiness is an indulgence in a short-lived pleasure. This comes and goes and has no substantial basis upon which an unending happiness can find a resting place.

"Happiness, what is it after all? Who can truly define it, give its meaning? Is it known to us at all? Isn't it a phantom, after all, in pursuit of which we are constantly but vainly striving and after a vain struggle, to give up the task, going into Eternity without having been able to reach or embrace it? Some of the most learned men and philosophers in all ages have racked their brains in order to discover what happiness is and what is its nature, but they have never succeeded in telling us."

An eminent writer named Varro calculated that there were no less than two hundred and eighty opinions at his time upon the subject, and Lucian, after giving the opinions of innumerable philosophers, shows the absurdity of the same, but did not succeed in establishing anything of his own. I think Varro was very modest in his calculations, for if you will bring me a thousand men and women I will agree to give you a thousand opinions upon Happiness.

No, we are not happy! Our memories of the past and our hopes for the future, intermingled with our fears of the present, are elements which will disturb any measure of the so-called happiness that we think we possess.

After all, let us think that we are happy; there is some pleasure in the thought, and let us remember it is a sort of happiness to know to what degree or extent we may be unhappy.

Absolutely the Purest Table Water

In all the world there is no other known spring like the great, never-falling

SUN-RAY

Spring in the side of a two thousand-foot mountain at Ellenville, New York. It was first tapped, long before the Revolution, by a prospector, who tunneled five hundred feet into the mountainside.

Then, for more than a century, it was lost, and in its stead there seemed to exist nothing but a legend of a spring of wonderful purity.

In 1905 it was rediscovered and in 1906 the property surrounding the spring was acquired, the finest and most sanitary water plant in the world was erected, and the water, in still and sparkling form, put on the market at a moderate price.

It is bottled ONLY at the spring, but is on sale everywhere. Sun-Ray table water is delicious and absolutely the purest in the world, and can be drunk in any quantity with positive benefit.

The Devine Name

By ARCHIBALD ROSS.

"Oh, Lord, our Lord, how excellent Thy name in all the earth."—Psalm 8:9.

Thy name, Thy precious name, Oh, Lord of hosts!

Essence of love, eternity and truth,

So clearly shadowed in our fleeting stay,

And known and cherished well by those who seek

Companionship with Thee—in gorgeous day,

Or nightfall, where Thou call'st them to Thy fold,

To rest within Thine embrace—on the heights

Of Chimborazos, or the fertile plains

Where cities rise, or on the mighty deep

Where the Titanic bore Thy children down

Without a fear—their only sigh for Thee—

Thy stamp imprinted on the human soul

To call when strange disaster hovers near,

And so we thank Thee for Thy precious name,

Clothed in the drapery of every grace—

Love, mercy, justice, chastity—combined

With tenderness and majesty—a name

So excellent that every honest heart

Will touch upon with care and reverence

In symbol as a fortress our protection,

In trial as our hiding place and safety.

Oh, Lord, our Lord, how excellent Thy name in all the earth.

HAPPINESS.

Some years ago the renowned showman Barnum, who gave birth to innumerable novelties in his peculiar line, proposed to give a show which was to consist of persons who were absolutely content and happy, whose happiness was perfect, unalloyed and the true article; but the exhibition did not materialize.

Evidently Mr. Barnum, sensible man that he was, arrived at the conclusion that such a show was an utter impossibility, because it was not possible to find the material with which to make the show a success.

To the unthinking mind it would seem to be a ludicrous proposition to lay down that there are scarcely any, if any, people who are truly happy and possessed of a full measure of happiness, and yet it is a fact. It was some author who once said that there was hardly a man, whatever his circumstances and situation, but if you get his confidence, will tell you that he is not happy, and he spoke the truth.

The joys of this world are fanciful and short; but its sorrows are real

Rabbi Dr. Maier Jung has been duly installed as chief minister of the Federation of Synagogues of London, and his inaugural sermon makes excellent and encouraging reading. He then and there pointed out that we Jews must cling to the Torah, but that our Torah cannot afford to ignore the age in which we live. If he realizes his mission to make Judaism a living force to his congregants and at the same time to preserve them and their descendants for our sacred traditions, his coming to London will stand out as an event of first-rate importance. At all events, it appears that Rabbi Jung has a message of his own to impart and that he will not be content to remain a weak follower in the steps of the ecclesiastical leaders of the United Synagogue.

The success of Yiddish drama in the English metropolis is just what capable observers would have expected. If this form of the dramatic art could succeed here, there was no reason why in England, so much nearer home, as it were, such a success was not to be duplicated. But the danger of these attempts to produce rivulets of tears, his silvery-gray beard waving to and fro, he silently looks at Welvel. The youth dodges the old man's piercing and pleading looks, shutting his own eyes so as to avoid the meeting and frustrate detection. All efforts are futile and his work is in vain. His heart, soul and spirit see, behold and observe the man with his pack, his troubles, his tortures and agony. Saying no word and emitting no sound, Welvel lifts the luggage, mounts it on his back and hops swiftly to the station, the old man following at some distance, unable to keep pace with the limping youngster. Welvel halts at the depot and waits for the man to come and deliver him from his burden. Repeating the former promises of this being a great Mitzvah, for the sake of which one may dispense with the fasting on the Day of Atonement, the man gets a hold on Welvel, embraces and kisses him. Somewhat embarrassed and delighted at the same time over his performed Mitzvah, his noble act, though never accepting the dispensing with fasting on Yom Kippur as a satisfactory reward, having passed through the tortures of fastings every now and then, this particular day especially, he goes homeward, however, turning his eyes back toward the station every once in a while, so as to see and behold the feeble man, over and again, some inner impulses and magic forces prompting these singular traits and astounding tendencies.

Simon the beadle, the father of Welvel, sits, in the interim, in the synagogue and ponders over his difficulties and perplexities. The Sabbath is approaching, the needs are multifarious, but his pockets are empty, not even a farthing for an antidotal curative. His wife warned him in the morning to behold their deplorable surroundings and observe the critical conditions. But, then, what could there be done on the premises? This was indeed a week of lamentations and privations, none of the Jews got married, engaged, initiated a male child into the Abrahamic Covenant or commemorated the Yahrzeit. All these combined, presumably, to ruin the beadle and have his family starved.

Presently a vehicle draws up in the front of the synagogue and halts at the entrance. A man of portly appearance dismounts and approaching the beadle tells him of the anniversary of his dead father occurring on the following day, being, however, on the route all the time, unable to stop at this or any other town for a day or two, he was advised, after having made some inquiries, to substitute Reb Simon for the kindling of the light, recital of the prayers, reading of the Kadish, declamation of the Psalmodies, study of the Apocalypse and refraining the entire day from food and drink. Agreeing to all these conditions and clauses, the beadle is handed over a five-dollar note, while the stranger mounts his carriage, reminds Simon of his onerous duties, bids the beadle good-day and immediately disappears, leaving no trace of himself, vehicle or horses.

Grateful and rejoicing, Simon runs home, gives his spouse a satisfactory smile and hands her over the five-dollar bill, telling her to make haste and buy all the necessities and commodities for the coming Sabbath. Astonished and bewildered at such a favorable turn, Mrs. Simon repairs to the grocer's, the butcher's, the baker's and the dairyman's, returning soon with all sorts of bundles and packages. The children are given supper, the parents following suit with delight and content, surprised at the same time at the prolonged absence of Welvel.

At this very juncture the latter appears on the threshold, stopping right there and gazing with amazement at the substantial meal, the merry children and the happy parents. Father and son exchange stories, each relating his particular experiences and singular happenings. The mother, however, thinks that the feeble man that came to Welvel for aid and the merchant that extended help to the beadle were but guises and disguises of Elijah the prophet, who was sent down from heaven for the temptation of the son and the compensation of the father. Jewish Heroism in the Turkish- Italian War.

A service has been held in the synagogue in Rome in memory of fallen Jewish heroes in the war. The press relates many instances of exceptional Jewish bravery during the campaign. Among the most prominent heroes are the Jewish officers, Achil Levy Bianchini, Emanuel Pugliese, Del Vecchio and Cohen.
Lieutenant Lamberto Segre, of Bologna, declined to serve in the active army as an officer, but joined as a private. The Jewish community of Turin promised a thousand lire to any Jew who should gain the gold medal for bravery in the war, and all preachers in the synagogues in Italy are continually appealing to the Jews to demonstrate their courage in battle and their loyalty to their country.
The Italian authorities in Tripoli are employing many Jews in various works, and they have felt obliged to change the pay day from Saturday to a weekday on this account. The Italian Jewish firm which is in charge of the works in the port of Tripoli has promised to devote the net profit to the fund for the widows and orphans of the fallen soldiers. A Jewish engineer, Emanuel Jonah, has distinguished himself in cutting the cables of the enemy.

A Song of Zion.

BY WALTER VERNON-EPSTEIN.

I.
Jerusalem, my boast and pride,
My heart, it yearns for thee,
The land where peace and joy abide,
Thy shores, when shall I see?

II.
O perfect, pure and pleasant soil,
Far-famed as Israel's race,
I love thy fields, thy fruits, thy toil,
Thy trees of stately grace.

III.
'Neath thy blue skies no mist is seen,
No drear nor darksome night;
Thy very hills of splend'rous sheen,
For God has made thee right.

IV.
Of precious stones thy walls are made,
Thy ramparts, jewels rare,
Thy gates, of oriental jade,
That spread a radiant glare.

V.
Of ivory hue thy homes are built,
Thy windows, crystal clear;
And every soul is free from guilt,
For God hath sent His cheer.

VI.
Jerusalem! My people's home,
Would God, I were in thee;
No more the Exile's aimless roam,
My paradise across the sea.

VII.
Where shepherds and their flocks
abound,
Where birds prolong their lay,
Where flowers bloom the whole year round,
And all the earth seems gay.

VIII.
Thy mountains stand, as heroes bold,
Thy rivers softly pass;
Thy pastures oft in psalms extolled,
Of nectar, breathes thy grass.

IX.
No thing that is not passing clean
Can come within thy gates;
On every side a smile is seen,
And joy e'en permeates.

X.
There hate and envy cannot dwell,
There lucre holds no sway;
There malice died, and Sh'china's spell,
Makes heavy hearts feel gay.

XI.
Rememb'rest thou the ancient days,
When prophets crowned they streets,
When Levites with their chants of praise
Recalled thy wond'rous feats?

XII.
In foreign lands thy sons abide,
We see thee but in dreams;
We sob, we sigh, our tears are dried
As Hope, it beckons and beams.

XIII.
"Another year," we softly pray
"O, Lord," Thy children cry;
"O, take us back to Yesterday,
To Israel's cherished destiny."

XIV.
Each day we pray, in accents low
Would God I were with Thee;
Our Faith is strong, our hopes they grow
Our Fatherland to see.

The final debate of the Senior clubs for the season took place on Saturday evening, June 29. The subject was "Resolved, That a Protective Tariff Is for the Best Interests of the People of the United States." Mr. Joseph Allen and Mr. Samuel Rothaus, of the Little Men's Club, represented the affirmative side and Mr. Moses A. Leavitt and Mr. Morris Rivkin, of the Young Strivers Club, spoke for the negative side. The award was made in favor of the latter, who were given medals donated by Mr. Simon F. Rothschild. Mr. Aaron W. Levy acted as chairman and as one of the judges, together with Mr. Morris Newman and Mr. Nathan H. Seidman.

The Sabbath school graduation exercises took place on Sunday evening June 30. Addresses were made by Rabbi Theodore F. Joseph, of Troy, N. Y., and Mr. Adolph Feldblum, president of the society, and Dr. Charles S. Bernheimer, superintendent.

The annual Sabbath school picnic took place on Tuesday, July 2, at Prospect Park. About 200 children attended, together with the superintendent and teachers.

Cornerstone for New Synagogue Laid.

A thousand men and women attended the dedication exercises in connection with the laying of the cornerstone of the new synagogue for the Congregation Tiphereth Israel, at Willoughby and Throop avenues, last Sunday afternoon. Joseph Barondess acted as chairman of the exercises and delivered a stirring address, urging those present to do all in their power to build a school for the children. Rabbi Nathan Krass spoke in English and Rev. H. Masliansky delivered an address in Yiddish.

Following the exercises, donations amounting to $2,000 were recorded. The officers of the congregation are: President, Max Spiegel; vice-president, Joseph Prensly; treasurer, Louis Cohen; trustees, Abraham Gordon, J. Brodie, Nathan Oshinsky, Isaac Smalseiser, S. Goldman, B. Plottel, S. Schulman.

Cong. Bath Israel Anshei Emes.

Mr. Harry G. Anderson, the superintendent of the congregation's Sunday school, was tendered a banquet on Sunday evening, June 23, at the Bedford Mansion, to mark the tenth anniversary of his connection with the Sunday school. Mr. A. H. Arons, the chairman of the School Board, acted as toastmaster. Among those who were present and delivered addresses were Secretary of State Edward Lazansky, District Attorney James C. Cropsey, Register Edward T. O'Loughlin and Michael Furst, president of Temple Israel. There were also addresses by Mr. Jacob Manne and Rabbi Goldfarb. Mr. Anderson was presented with a silver loving cup on behalf of the Congregation and Sunday school. Mr. Anderson, although a young man, is well known in Brooklyn and holds the office of Assistant District Attorney.

The Talmud Torah held its annual public examination on Sunday afternoon, June 30. Addresses were delivered by the chairman, Mr. H. Goldsmith, and the Rev. Israel Goldfarb, principal of the school. The children excelled themselves in reading and recitations of prayers, and the translation of Biblical selections. Prizes were awarded to the best pupils and ice cream was served to all. The Talmud Torah will have a special summer session during the summer months.

The Sisterhood held its closing meeting of the season on Wednesday, June 19. There was a good attendance. Refreshments were served.

The annual children's picnic was held on Tuesday, July 2, at the picnic grounds of Prospect Park. Two special cars were chartered to convey the children to the park. There was plenty of milk, ice cream and cake for all. Dances and prize games kept the children well occupied and gave them a "jolly good time."

Kaiser-Cahn.

The wedding of Miss Juliette Kaiser, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Salli Kaiser, of 307 East Ninety-third street, Manhattan, and Mr. Leopold Cahn, son of Mr. and Mrs. Morris Cahn, took place at the Willoughby Mansion on Thursday evening, June 27. The Rev. Dr. S. R. Cohen officiated.

Havana.

Anton Moskovitz, who has had a life-long experience in manufacturing high-grade Havana cigars, has recently opened a Harlem Branch store at No. 138 West 116th street. "There they go!" From the manufacturer to the smoker in large and small quantities. Boxes of 12s, 25s and 50s at wholesale prices. Smokers who are about to go on their vacation will find enough to choose from, and can rest assured that their tastes can be gratified.

A new feature of the Harlem Branch has been added in offering to the public a fine selection of imported Turkish, Russian, Austrian, Bosnian and Herzegovinian tobaccos, as well as ladies and gentlemen cigarettes of the above tobaccos. Smokers will find it advantageous to visit this store, the only one of the kind in Harlem. ***

Lloyd's New Steamship to Be Named Columbus.

The new passenger steamship now building for the North German Lloyd will be named Columbus, in honor of the discoverer of America, Christopher Columbus. The steamer will be used in the New York-London-Paris-Bremen service of the company, and will make her first trip in 1914. She will be of about 37,000 tons and will make about 20 knots per hour.

The selection of the name Columbus is in line with the policy of the company to give to passenger steamers names complimentary to the United States. The first steamship named under the new order was the George Washington.

A most engaging series of incidents sustained by a love interest that appeals because of its sincerity, a proper tangle of plot which is ingeniously revealed and then as artfully unraveled, a number of sharp dramatic climaxes and real thrills, and, above all, a sustained, wholesome and refreshing quality of fun, combine to make "Officer 666," at the Gaiety Theatre, the best farce in years. The piece furnishes many mysterious and not a few melodramatic moments that are all the more enjoyable because of the substantial quality of its story in which additional appeal is furnished by the fact that its scenes are laid within a stone's throw of the playhouse in which they are staged.

Jakey Goldstein, Wireless Sharp.

Down at Public School 34, on Broome and Willett streets, they will stand up and tell you stoutly that Jakey Goldstein knows more about wireless telegraphy than anybody on the East Side. They are proud of Jake. At the closing of the school yesterday he simply walked away with the big physics prize, which generally goes to one of the older boys, a graduate. Jake is only 14 and still has a couple of years before he is graduated, and it looks as if he has a mortgage on that prize for the next two years.

Jake and his friends, Abie Lavenkron, Isidor Sommers, Morris Rosenbaum and Jacob Wurtzburg, have rigged up a wireless station on top of the school building. There they receive messages at all hours of the day. Once when everything was going just right they got one from thirty-five miles out at sea. Every evening at 6 o'clock a curious crowd gathers and wants to know "how the Giants came out." Jake has to confess that he hasn't got any word from the Polo Grounds as yet, and that is the only weak cog in Jake's otherwise perfect machine. But if they ever put up a wireless station on the top of Coogan's Bluff they'll have to get a couple of extra cops to clear Broome and Willett streets for traffic.

Jake is at work now on a new machine. He is going to raise an aerial from the window of his home at 411 Grand street, over the Penny Provident Bank, and in a few days expects to have it in working order.—New York Sun.

CHILDREN'S PAGE.

The Law of Life

Dear Children:

Hillel, the great sage, now pronounces the final words which conclude his remarkable series of ethical development, beginning with the law of life and leading us onward and upward to the law of the higher life, and ending now, with the great lesson that teaches us the law of the highest life, which is the life of the world to come, thus, says Hillel, "He who has acquired the words of the Torah has acquired for himself life in the world to come."

This gradual development of the human mind with its thoughts, desires and aspirations, is interestingly described by the Dubner Maggid of blessed memory as follows:

"The little babe loves nothing more than his mother's breast; the time comes when he is weaned from her milk and accustoms himself to partake of food—his mother's breast no longer possesses any charms for him. In fact, if she will offer to nurse him he will run away as fast as his little legs will carry him—he now seeks to amuse himself. He rides upon a stick and makes believe it is a horse. He becomes older and despises such amusements; he now loves real toys. Of these also he gets tired in time. He becomes still older and he loves games and other childish sports. The time comes when he also outgrows these desires and he loves to be honored and praised. This desire fills his mind with pride, vanity and conceit."

Why did the blessed God endow the heart of the child with the love of these vain things? It is because the human heart is the dwelling place of love and desire. Desire is the mother of joy and sorrow—joy, when the desire is fulfilled, sorrow, when the desire is unsatisfied—love, to him who helps him to attain his desire—hate, for the one who prevents him from attaining it. These in turn produce other emotions and passions, such as anger, good will, pain, pleasure, kindness, cruelty, etc., all these feelings are born and developed in the human being through nonsensical causes, the reason for this is that God created everything to cause man to realize his highest happiness which consists in the worship of the Almighty, blessed be He. These feelings and emotions in the heart of the child may be compared to the precious gems that the dealer in diamonds brings with him from a foreign land, whose fear of losing them during the journey causes him to set them, temporarily, in wood or lead, and when he reaches his destination he takes them out the common settings and sets them in gold and silver, as is appropriate for each of them. This did God do with the child—as there are no more precious feelings than love and hate. Love to love God and His Torah; hate, to hate that which is evil in the eyes of the Holy One, blessed be

He, and as these feelings can be properly used only when the child has grown to manhood, in order that these emotions shall not be unknown to the child when he grows up, He has set these gems, temporarily, in tin and lead settings; thus, when the father frowns upon the child it is afraid—there is the emotion of fear. It sees some toy and desires it—thus exercising the emotions of love and desire. When it begins to walk it desires a stick for a hobby horse—it is glad when it has it and sorry when it has it not—thus exercising the emotions of joy and sorrow. Thus it is with the child until it is wise enough to use those emotions as God desires that it shall use them, and with all that there runs through these emotions and passions of the human mind a feeling that desire has not been attained. "This feeling," say the rabbins, "is due to the fact that the human soul despises all the joys of life." "It is comparable," says the Midrash "to a plebian who married a king's daughter; if he should give her all the pleasures in the world they are as nothing in her eyes? Why? Because she is the daughter of a king! Thus it is with the soul—if you brought her any amount of commandments and good deeds accomplished, yet her desire would not be filled because she is the daughter of the King, blessed be His name," and as such has only one desire which is to live in the life of the world to come, and that life man can obtain only through the acquirement of the Torah.

This is what King David meant when he prayed to God, "Let me sojourn in Thy tent to all eternity."

She: "You are always talking about the fashions. Do you think that you would know the latest fashions in hats if you were to enter a milliner's?"

He: "Certainly."

She: "How?"

He (ruefully): "By asking the prices."

A very fat man who had just retired from the grocery trade was one day met in the street by a friend. The friend, wishing to chaff him, said:

"You are failing since you retired from business; you are so thin I hardly knew you."

"Probably I am," replied the ex-grocer; "I certainly don't weigh so much as I did while in the grocery business."

"Lucy, dear, if I should attempt to spell 'Cupid,' why should I be prevented from getting beyond the first syllable?"

Lucy gave it up, whereupon William said:

"Because, when I come to 'C-u,' of course I cannot go farther."

Lucy then said she thought that was the nicest conundrum she had ever heard.

The other day a man was charged with stealing studs. He was brought before the magistrate and asked why he stole the studs, and he said:

"Well, you see, it was written on the card, 'Collar studs,' so I just went in and I collared them."

Clerk: "I'm afraid I can't let you have that drug, sir."

Customer: "Why not? Do I look like a man who would kill himself?"

Clerk: "Well, I wouldn't go so far as to say that, sir; but if I looked like you I should be tempted."
