"A NEW ANTOKOLSKI"

FROM THE YIDDISH OF "SHALOM ALEICHEM"—AUTHORIZED VERSION BY HANNAH BERMAN

It happened not long ago, some three or four weeks back, that I was playing one morning with my little grandchild—the prettiest little girl in the world, and, of course, the cleverest as well. Her name is Bella, and she is already more than six months old!

If one holds such a tiny creature in one's arms, carrying her here and there, one must sing a little song to her, and keep dancing around the room as well. Young folks of Bella's pattern are very fond of such things.

I must have become very deeply absorbed in my playful occupation, for, I did not see a young man come into the room. So far as my knowledge of him went, he might have sprouted up out of the ground, like a mushroom. When I saw him, he was quite close to me, right under my elbow—a young man of twenty-two, twenty-three years old, with piercing black eyes, and wearing a black broad-brimmed hat on his head. His manners were easy, unembarrassed, and free from affectation. He bowed to me and addressed me as follows:

"You are Shalom Aleichem, and I am one of your most ardent admirers. I read everything you write—every word. And I should like to express to you my gratification, if you will allow me to do so. That is to say, if you will give me the privilege, I will 'plaster' you."

I did not understand the meaning of his words. What did he mean by wanting to "plaster" me? What would he do it with, and why? I told him that I failed to comprehend him, and he explained himself with a smile:

"I am a sculptor and I make busts out of plaster. I call that 'plastering.' It is only my way of shortening my speech. I should like very much to model you in plaster and afterwards cast the bust in bronze. I should like to make you a present of your own bust, for—because I like you!"

"Oh, in that case!" I said. And I called my daughter, the mother of granddaughter set up a wail of protest. Not against the sculptor, nor his art, but against the wrong he had done her in causing her to have her juries and will allow themselves to be pacified and reconciled.

I took the sculptor into my study—my Cheder—and we had a long

"Where does a young man come from?"

"From Paris. That is to say, from Kishineff."

"Paris is not Kishineff, nor is Kishineff Paris, though, it may be that Kishineff is not less famous than Paris. Indeed, it may be more famous because of its pogroms!"

"Well, I would have you know," said the young man to me with an ironical smile, "I would have you know that I carry about with me two mementoes of the pogroms. In the first place, I believe I have to thank the pogroms for the diploma I got from the Paris Academy. And, in the second place, if it had not been for the pogroms, my father would still have had his two eyes."

My visitor interested me more and more as he went on talking. Only, his speech was so rapid, so breathless, that I had to call his attention to the fact several times. I reminded him that we were neither trying to catch an express, nor were we out in a thunder storm. I begged of him to tell me his history a little less hurriedly, if possible.

He complied with my request, slackened speed and proceeded to tell me the life story of a Jewish artist—of himself, that is.

How many artists have gone astray amongst us, and how many go astray every day of the week. Nobody looks at them, no more than at the little stars that twinkle and go out before our very eyes. These talented young persons are not lost to us because of romantic enticements, allurements, nor because of the soul-destroying tragedies which have annihilated the powers of other artists, as we know from history, Jewish artists are lost to their people simply and solely through want of bread to eat—a morsel of bread to keep them alive while they work and work at their art. Our poverty is so great—the like of it is not to be met with in the whole, wide world—that we have nothing with which to support our talented people

THE FIVE FRANKFORTERS

"The Five Frankforters," the most successful comedy produced on the German stage for many years, was written by Carl Rosler with the cooperation of the actor and author, Ludwig Heller, who in our picture, the first figure standing from the left, represents the Neapolitan Rothschild. The actors here photographed belong to the company of the Munich Schauspielhaus. An American production of "The Five Frankforters" is now running at the Thirty-ninth Street Theatre, this city, and is duplicating its European success.

the tiny Bella. "Here take back your bargain. A man has come to plaster me. He is a sculptor." My play cut short. But, these little ones have one good quality—they are quick to forget their wrongs and in-conversation.

"What is your name?"
"Benjamin Patlagean."

at the right time, while they are yet unable to help themselves. And, so they are lost to us forever.

To the young Patlagean there happened a misfortune which had also in it the elements of his successful future. Throughout the rest of Russia the pogroms were as nothing in comparison with what took place in Kishineff. It was the most perfected piece of work that the hooligans had undertaken. Nothing was left undone which they ought to have done, and nothing was done which they ought to have left undone. And Patlagean's father, a cement merchant, paid for the pogroms with his two eyes. Thank God! he managed to escape with his life, but he was left without eyes, really without eyes.

There is no need to add that the whole family was completely ruined, from every possible point of view. So great were their troubles that the oldest son, the sculptor's brother, tried to put an end to his life with a bullet.

The young Benjamin had always shown a decided taste for drawing and modeling. The pogrom made a profound impression on him, and he perpetuated its memory by modeling in wax the figure of a young hooligan with blood-thirsty eyes and a fierce countenance. In one hand he held a stone and in the other the head of an unfortunate Jew, the eyes of which were only half-closed. The expression that hovered on the dead face of the Jew was such that the lips seemed to be uttering defiance, and the eyes to be looking in mockery at the hooligan, as if they were saying:

"You are as dirt! You cannot take from me more than life!"

The statuette was seen and admired. It was cast in plaster and sent away to St. Petersburg. It bore the inscription "A moment of the Pogrom." It was photographed and reproduced on postcards which were sold in thousands all over Europe and America. But the artist got nothing for his work, as is usual. He became famous though and some kind people interested themselves in him and procured for him a small stipend for two years from Baron Ginsberg. After that he was assisted for another two years by a Bessarabian nobleman named Cassimir. So that he spent four years at the Paris Academy and got his diploma. As is the custom amongst young Jewish artists, he suffered keenly during his studentship; he suffered all sorts of deprivations, including hunger and overworked himself into the bargain.

And here ends the first part of my narrative.

There are a great number of artists of all description in this world of ours. I believe that in Paris alone there are about forty thousand of whom about three-quarters are failures, and are on the verge of starvation. Of the rest only a fraction really succeed in making a living in comfort. In these circumstances, it may be taken for granted that in order to make a name for himself, an artist must be exceptionally talented, along with which he must get an opportunity to show what he can do. I should like to know which of the two was more potent in bringing out Patlagean—his exceptional talent or his good fortune. As soon as he had finished his academy course he had the rare good fortune to become acquainted with a wealthy American family named Jenkis. He modeled two or three busts for them and they were so highly pleased with his talent that they recommended him to many of their friends, French, English and American millionaires, who gave him one commission after the other. They were all as pleased with his work as were the Jenkis's, and paid him well.

When I came to ask myself how it was that Patlagean succeeded where so many older men than he had failed; it became apparent that he has more than an ordinary share of talent. His busts are marvelously true and faithful likenesses. But, as truth alone does not stand for art, it is clear that Patlagean possesses, along with the photographic eye, a brain that sees and hears the hidden mysteries of the soul. He has within him a spark of the divine fire. And he has it in him to express the heart of a man with a line or a movement of the finger tip. A scrap of clay, kneaded in his hands, and stuck here and there—what is it, after all? Nothing, and everything. I am not an artist, but I often think to myself that each living creature has his own physiognomy, and each physiognomy has its own hidden meaning.

Given the hour and the man, the artist ought to be able to say what each physiognomy really expresses. And the greatest gift is that which enables the artist to catch the all-important expression and to transfer it onto paper or canvas, or utter it as a new truth in clay. It means that he must recreate the soul of the model—bring his dead second-self into existence. Surely, it is God's own gift to be able to imbreathe into that which was lifeless a soul and an independent life!

It did not take me long to find out that the young Patlagean was of the order of men to whom is given the creative power in abundance.

But, to return to our conversation. When he had come to the end of his brief history I asked of him:

"What must I do so that you may 'plaster' me, as you put it?"

"Nothing, only sit still, while I look at you. I will need about ten or twelve or at most fifteen sittings of an hour each."

"Well, my friend," I said, "you may look at me as much as you wish, if you do not grow tired of it. And then I should like to see. Not to see, but to know what it all means."

The young man replied that I did to ask him if, in view of his successes, he had not managed to lay by a little money already—for art's own sake!

"How could I? I am only working about a year and I have to support my little sisters and brothers, all of whom are more or less talented, some drawing and some in modeling, and my older brother is at the Paris University, and my father is without eyes!"

As I listened to the quiet murmurings of the new Antokolski I thought me of the louder cries that came every day from the hearts of the unhappy victims of the Kishineff pogroms. And I said under my breath:

"My curses fall upon your heads, you hooligans! You fell upon a Jew who had never done any one as much harm as a fly might carry on its back, and you tore out from his head his two eyes, as if they had offended you. More than this, you deprived a house full of gifted children of their means of support. It may be that you deprived the whole Jewish nation of several ornaments—new Antokolski's, and who can tell if they might not have been greater than Antokolski. Murderers! What have you done?"

Our chats and arguments were so pleasant that I did not feel the days flying by. Before I realized it, I found that the bust was finished—a new self was standing over against me. A second "I" had evolved itself out of the lifeless clay. And I am ready to swear it—this new "I" looked where I looked and felt what I felt and thought what I thought. It was almost unearthly.

That was how I made the acquaintance of the new Antokolski. Montreux, Switzerland, Nov., 1911.

not seem to have much faith in him. But he was not at all offended by my remarks. He too asked me to arrange a day and an hour when he might call and take me to his studio, in the house of the Americans who had a villa of their own on the mountain side, on the outskirts of Montreux. He wished to show me his work and if I cared to have my bust modeled he would be highly pleased; if not, it would also be well.

At the appointed hour my young friend arrived and brought me off to his studio. No sooner had we entered the lofty glass-roofed apartment than the younger Mr. Jenkis came forward and greeted us in the friendliest fashion. He was full of the desire to show me the work of young Patlagean, particularly, the bust of himself which he had just finished. The American placed himself by the side of the bust and I was struck at once by the remarkable likeness which the sculptor had succeeded in bringing out—so remarkable that the dead eyes of the clay seemed to me to look at me as the living eyes of the model were looking, and the smile that hovered around the young man's lips had been transferred to the clay with great felicity. Every separate line and curve of the face was brimful of life. It seemed to me that the face was not only smiling at me; but that the lips were about to part in speech. I turned towards the sculptor and I fancied that he had grown taller by a head, by two heads, since I had seen him last, only a few moments before.

"A new Antokolski," I thought, "and, perhaps, a greater, who knows?"

The next day he came to me with a cartload of clay. For the first few hours he seemed to me to be merely playing at kneading and beating the clay, but after the third or fourth sitting there began to grow up before my eyes the semblance of a man—a living man, and a familiar one.

While the young man worked we talked and talked and I gathered that the new Antokolski was full of ideas and suggestions for all sorts of pictures of Jewish history and Jewish life. His words were fired with artistic fervor and within him burned a true Jewish spirit. It was worth while watching the light that shone in his eyes, and the enthusiasm that was expressed in every muscle of his face as he talked.

"Why do you think I go on working so energetically? To this end I wish to save up some money, in order that I may be able to work for myself for two years or three years, or four years—for myself, for myself alone, and not to sell!"

He paused for a while and then went on again in the same strain:

"And, all this that I have done already is as nothing. I wish to go to America this winter or next. The Jenkis's are persuading me to go there. They tell me that I may make in America in one winter enough to keep me for three years.

"Do you know what it means to work for three whole years for one's self? To work for the sake of the work, for art's sake and not for money—for the sake of one's dreams?"

"Perhaps, afterwards, I may go to the Holy Land and there create and create in clay without ever stopping—only for the sake of art itself!"

Noticing his shabby attire and his frugal manner of living, I ventured

A movement is on foot among foreign Jews residing in Germany to form an organization of their own, in order to be able to represent their own interests. It is a question whether the German Jews will tolerate such an organization and whether it will not expel the leaders of the movement. The orthodox section of German Jewry is in favor of such an organization and promises to further it, because when the foreign Jews are organized they will strengthen orthodox Jewry in many ways.

The Union des Associations Israelites arranged through the members of the Balkan Relief Mission that, after the fall of Jannina, which has a Jewish population of about 3,500, they should be assisted with every possible dispatch. For this purpose a depot with victuals and medical appliances was placed at Prevesa, with the concurrence of the Greek authorities, which had been promised to the Jewish Mission by the late King George. Immediately after the fall of Jannina flour, etc., to the value of 10,000 francs was forwarded there.

The Polish anti-Semites have submitted to the premier their scheme for restricting the participation of Jews in the benefits of the Warsaw Loan and Credit Society, a move which was undertaken in connection with the boycott. The premier submitted their proposal to the judicial authorities to report on its legal aspect. The native students of the Polytechnic High School in Cother have declared a peculiar strike on account of the Russo-Jewish Students' Corporation being tolerated by the educational authorities. The natives are of opinion that they alone have the right to form students' corporations and are furious that the Russo-Jewish students should exercise the same rights. As they have no other means to prevent the existence of a Jewish students' corporation, they have declared that they will cease to wear their uniform, a practice common to every students' corporation, as long as the educational authorities allow the Jewish students' corporation to exist.

The death is reported of M. Henri Aron, doyen of the Central Consistory of France and the Paris Consistory, who has passed away at the age of 84. Born in Strasbourg of an old Alsatian family, he took part in the war of 1870 as sergeant in the National Guard, and was then raised to the rank of captain. Threatened by the Commune, he escaped to Boulogne-sur-Mer and then to Brussels. He was greatly interested in public work and occupied the position of Assistant-Mayor of the Second District in Paris for a period of twenty-six years. On leaving that position, in 1908, he was appointed by the government Honorary Mayor and raised to the rank of Officer of the Legion of Honor. He also took a very keen interest in all matters affecting the Jewish community.

Twenty-five Years of the Jewish Publication Society.

The Jewish Publication Society of America will celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of its existence on April 5 and 6 in Philadelphia, the city in which the society transacts its business. The programme of the celebration includes an authors' evening, to which have been invited all the authors that have been engaged in producing the works published by the society. On Sunday morning and afternoon public sessions will be held, at which papers descriptive of the society's work will be read. The procedure adopted in deciding on publications will be presented, and in particular a resume will be given of the work done by the Bible translators, who are soon to complete a new translation of the Bible into English. The celebration will close with a banquet, at which over 150 guests from out of town are expected to be present.

Though the work of the society is localized in Philadelphia, the membership is recruited from the whole English-speaking world—the United States, Canada, England, South Africa and Australia. This internationalism will be expressed at the celebration by the presence of delegates from abroad and by greetings from all parts of the world sent by bodies, if not with identical, at least with kindred aims.

When the creation of a Jewish publication society was broached and seventy persons signed a call convening an organization meeting in Philadelphia on June 3, 1888, few believed that it would grow to the importance it has now attained. Two earlier attempts had been made to maintain publishing societies for the English-speaking Jews of America, and both had died after a struggling existence of a few years. With this fate before their eyes the leaders of American Jewry were not disposed to believe in a literary movement based on popular support. The first officers were confronted by two problems—the production of readers, and the production of writers, and the former involved the further problem of funds. The solution of the problem of the readers or members, for, as implied above, the beneficiaries of the society are at the same time its patrons, lay in the belief of the projectors that no people is great unless it possesses a great literature, and no people, however great, can hope to remain so unless it fosters its literary achievements. In a peculiar sense this is true of the Jews, a minority people, who seek to maintain their identity in non-Jewish surroundings, and must create an enlightened public opinion. This constitutes the aim of the society—to produce a cultured Jewry and a sympathetic public. From the beginning it strove to afford the English-speaking Jew of today the means of becoming acquainted with the Jew of the past, with the Jewish literature of all ages, with Judaism as a religion and as a form of life. Such an aim forms an appeal to all Jews, and, in point of fact, the society has attracted to its ranks thousands of American and other English-speaking Jews who share the feelings and the aspirations of its founders, and to-day it can depend for the prosecution of its work upon the funds derived from its membership payments, supplemented by special donations and bequests and the sale of its books to the general public.

The membership grew slowly. During the first six months a total of 882 members was secured. By 1892 the number had risen to 2,957. Thereafter the first decided increase occurred in 1897, when it reached 4,101. Eight years later, in 1905, it was 5,430, and at that number it again remained practically stationary for five years. Since 1911 the greatest increases can be recorded. From 7,608 in that year it increased to 10,100 in 1912, and on March 1, 1913, it attained the 11,000 mark.

In the twenty-five years of the society's existence the total expenditures have been $473,506.78. The sources of income are various. The dues of members have amounted to $330,631.43; from sales of books the sum of $65,723.78 has been received, and these, together with the Bible fund, the beginnings of a capital fund, a permanent fund of $13,330.03 and miscellaneous receipts, have brought the total receipts up to $479,375.18.

The society has published eighty-seven volumes. Its output includes history, ethics, essays, fiction, juveniles, poetry and exegesis. They have secured for our delectation English, American, German, French, Russian and Palestinian co-operation. They have brought within easy access the present and the past. It has the distinction of having introduced Israel Zangwill to America through "The Children of the Ghetto," written at its instance. It has made Graetz's authoritative "History of the Jews" the only work that treats Jewish history from Bible times down to our own generation, accessible to thousands of English readers. It is now publishing a comprehensive five-volume work on "The Legends of the Jews," connected with Biblical characters and events, by Dr. Louis Ginzberg, the professor of Talmud at the Jewish Theological Seminary of America. Dr. S. Schechter's two brilliant volumes of essays entitled "Studies in Judaism" are on its list of publications. And the foremost Hebrew-writing author of the present day, Asher Ginzberg, writing under the pseudonym 'Ahad Ha'am,' is exercising a potent influence on the Jewish college youth of England and America through the translation of his original essays published by the Jewish Publication Society of America. In short, the more than five-foot English-Jewish literary shelf created by the society stands in a place that would have been practically vacant if a less comprehensive and genial policy had been followed.

A series of monographs on movements on Judaism. Professor Schechter, of New York, is writing on "Pharisaism"; Rev. Dr. Joseph H. Hertz, the newly elected Chief Rabbi of England, on "Mysticism"; Dr. S. Schulman will write on "Reform Judaism"; Dr. Isaac Husik, on "Rationalism"; Mr. Norman Bentwich, attached to the Cairo Ministry of Justice, will treat "Hellenism," and Professor Richard Gottheil, of Columbia University, will give an exposition of Zionism.

Annual Kehillah Convention.

(Communicated.)
The office of the Jewish community (Kehillah) of New York city is now being kept very busy with the final preparations for the fourth annual convention, which will be held beginning Saturday evening, March 12, in the auditorium of the Hebrew Technical School for Girls, Second avenue and Fifteenth street, and at which over 600 organizations will be represented.

In addition to the opening meeting on Saturday evening, at which the reports of the Executive Committee and of other committees will be presented, there will also be sessions held on Sunday morning and afternoon, April 13. Among the reports will be those of the American Jewish Committee, presented by Mr. Louis Marshall, and of the Bureau of Education, presented by Prof. Israel Friedlaender.

The report of the Executive Committee will in part deal with the work which the Kehillah has done in eliminating some of the evils of the East Side, of which revelations were made last summer. There will also be a report of the Board of Rabbis, which is made up of thirty of the leading orthodox rabbis of Greater New York, and which has been devoting itself to the work of regulating religious observances.

The tentative programme of the convention is as follows:

1. Report of the Executive Committee by the chairman, Dr. J. L. Magnes.
2. Report of the American Jewish Committee, Mr. Louis Marshall.
3. Report of the Committee on Education by the chairman, Prof. Israel Friedlaender.
4. Report on the Committee on Social and Philanthropic Work, Mr. Cyrus L. Sulzberger.
5. Report on Board of Rabbis (Vaad Horabbonim), Rabbi S. H. Glick.
6. Appointment of committees.
7. Discussion of reports.
8. Presentation of resolutions.
9. Presentation of amendments to the constitution.
10. Election of members of the Executive Committee and of the Advisory Council.

Free Synagogue's Sixth Anniversary.

The sixth anniversary of the Free Synagogue was celebrated by giving a dinner at the Hotel Astor last Thursday night, at which over 350 persons participated. The dinner was given as a farewell to the rabbi of the synagogue, Dr. Stephen S. Wise, who, with his wife and children, leaves shortly for Palestine and Egypt, to be gone for about six months.

Some prominent speakers responded when called upon by Hon. Henry Morgenthau, who presided at the post-prandial exercises. Notable among them was Dr. Rudolph Eucken, professor of the University of Jena and a winner of a Noble prize, who delivered a masterly address in German upon "Religion and Life." Other speakers and their topics were Hon. Abram I. Elkus, "The Free Synagogue in American Israel"; United States Senator Harry Lane, of Oregon, "New Ideals of Democracy"; Rabbi William Rosenau, of Baltimore, "The Synagogue in American Life"; Rev. Nehemiah Boynton, moderator of the Congregational Church of America, "Church and Synagogue for the World," and Hon. Charles S. Whitman, "Moral Ideals of a City." Hon. Adolph Lewisohn and Dr. Wise made brief addresses.

Romanian Jewish Home for Aged.

The annual meeting of the members of the Jewish Home for Aged and Infirm, which is maintained by the Romanian Jewish Federation at Mount Vernon, N. Y., was held at the home on Sunday last at 10.30 a. m. The various reports were submitted and showed that the income from September, 1911, to March, 1913, was $12,701.58. At present there are seven female and five male inmates of the home, and negotiations are in progress to purchase the adjoining house.

The officers elected for the ensuing year were Dr. P. A. Siegelstein, president; A. L. Kasner, vice-president; Dr. J. E. Braunstein, secretary, and Meyer Sanft, treasurer. Forty-eight directors were also chosen.

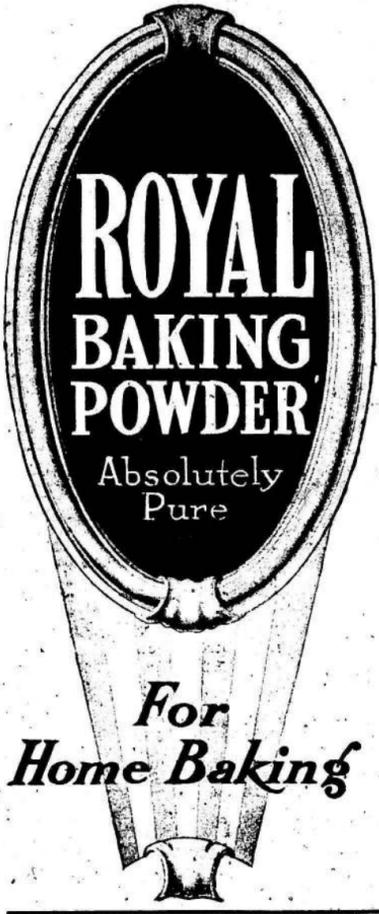

New Synagogue for the Bronx.

A number of gentlemen prominent in Bronx Orthodox circles have established a new synagogue at No. 937 East 167th street. The congregation will be known as the Beth Hamedrash Hachodesh and is strictly orthodox. Over thirty members are enrolled and a number of those residing in the vicinity will shortly join. Larger quarters are now being sought and a Talmud Torah will be instituted. All moneys received by the congregation will be used for charitable purposes.

The trustees are Messrs. Louis Goldstein, Simon Landres and Morris Ehrlich.

JEWS AND SCIENCE

DR. PAUL EHRLICH

By B. Horowitz.

To be acclaimed as the greatest living exponent of medical therapeutics, to be ranked with a Pasteur and a Koch, is Ehrlich's distinction. To the public he is known chiefly as the discoverer of "606," but this great triumph is merely the climax to a series of progressive researches, all of the most far-reaching importance, and all based upon an underlying principle, a foundation that has proved the basis for his life's work. In him the system and the logic of the scientist find its most brilliant exponent.

Ehrlich was a poor student, both at the gymnasium and at the university. He took little interest in class work and lectures, and actually failed to get his doctorate in the prescribed time. All this, however, showed an unusual originality, rather than an unusual dullness, for while his class was busily engaged in routine work, Ehrlich was experimenting in his little back room or pondering over some vexing problem.

Very early in life Ehrlich began a series of investigations on the action of dyestuffs on different parts of the body. This proved the starting point to a continuous series of brilliant experiments, and strikingly original deductions. He found that the same dyestuffs act differently on different tissues of the body. A given dye would act in a particular way upon a certain part of the system, and would fail to act, or act in an entirely different way, upon another part. This led him to the idea of specificity—the idea that cells are specific in their functions. Each cell possesses certain atomic groupings, certain chemical structures, that enables it to combine or react with certain types of substances, whose relationship with parts of the cell could be compared to the relationship existing between a lock and key. If a dye reacts with nervous tissue and not with adipose tissue; it is because it finds its receptor, or fitting key, in the former.

Now note how Ehrlich makes use of this basic idea in all his work.

The blood, besides consisting of the fluid or serum portion, also contains solids, chief of which are the corpuscles—the red (haemoglobin) oxygen carriers, and the white (leucocytes) body defenders. Ehrlich found that in different parts of the body the white corpuscles stained dyes quite differently. This suggested to him—as a result of his lock and key conception—that there would be present more than one type of leucocyte. And indeed, a close investigation revealed five different varieties.

But see how important the finding becomes. In normal human beings definite amounts of each of these five varieties are present in the blood; it is only in pathological conditions that the proportions vary.

In the course of his experiments with dyes, Ehrlich found that tubercle bacilli retentively retain fuchsin, a red dye. This at once gave a ready means of identifying the tubercle bacillus, and has proved of inestimable service. By staining bacteria with fuchsin, and then treating with acid, all with the exception of the tubercle bacilli will readily give up the dye.

To the study of immunity Ehrlich has been the most important contributor.

Let us first get a glimpse of the subject: It is known to all that certain people are more resistant to attacks, less apt to contract disease, than others. Why? We answer, some persons are physically strong, others weak. That is quite true. But a further explanation can be offered as a result of a great Russian scientist's study. We have spoken of the leucocytes, the white blood corpuscles. These were found to be the body's defenders. No sooner did virulent microbes from the outside find their way into the system than the leucocytes would at once attack them, and a battle royal would ensue. If the leucocytes were numerous and strong enough, the invaders would soon be vanquished; if not, the leucocytes in turn would be slaughtered, the resulting dead matter forming the well-known pus; upon this the invaders would thrive and gradually spread over the whole system, bringing havoc and ruin in their train.

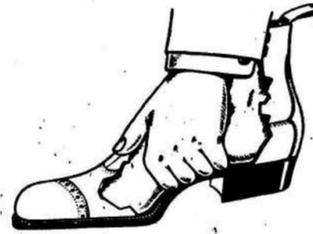

What was to be understood, then, by the expression "a healthy individual?" That the component parts of his system were healthy; that his blood was healthy; that his leucocytes were numerous and vigorous. The problem now became not so much one of curing the disease, as increasing the resistive power of the individual.

It was found in the course of experiments that whereas a given quantity of a toxic substance would prove fatal, that same amount, if given in small quantities at a time, would prove harmless. Further experiments showed that the amounts of these toxic or poisonous substances could be increased with successive injections without any serious harm accruing; and, indeed, a stage could finally be reached where a quantity, which in the beginning would have proved immediately fatal, could be injected with impunity.

Still further investigation showed that the injection of toxic substances gave rise to anti-toxic bodies in the system, and provided the toxic dose was not too large at any time, sufficient of the anti-toxic substance was manufactured to neutralize the poisonous influences of the toxins. These researches culminated in von Behring's diphtheria cure. By Jewish University for Jerusalem in the Air—Big British Jewish Tailors' Strike Movement—The Dramas of the Rothschilds—Problem of Jews College—Tracing the Community's Child Wastage.

London, March 20, 1913.

I am told that serious efforts are going to be made to establish a Jewish university in Jerusalem. The idea has floated in the air for a considerable time, but a Jewish university has recently become an urgent need. Most people are aware that the vast majority of Russian Jewish students are not admitted to the Russian universities, and are compelled to seek the hospitality of non-Russian universities. In Switzerland, Germany, France and Austria and of late Italy, Russian Jewish students by the thousands have joined the universities and technical colleges. In Germany there is a strong anti-Semitic movement on foot to get the number of Russo-Jewish students admitted to the universities limited to a small fraction, and this movement is almost assured of government support. One of the immediate corollaries to the three years' service bill in France was a similar proposal, and a movement of the same character is spreading in Austria. Russo-Jewish students, therefore, are in imminent danger of losing all hope of a university training in Europe. The remedy which has occurred to the Jewish mind is a Jewish university in Jerusalem. Some of the distinguished Jewish intellectuals on the Continent have approved the idea and very probably an appeal will be made to the generosity of Jews throughout the world.

The dispute in the Manchester Jewish tailoring trade between the employers and the men has not been settled, but has resulted in the bulk of the men coming out on strike. Just at present the trade is in a most healthy and satisfactory condition, and orders are so abundant that it is difficult to cope with them. A stoppage just now must cause both loss and inconvenience. The men in the union gave twenty-four hours' notice on March 14 of their intention to cease work, and on March 16 the only work done was by non-unionists by small working masters or in cases where the masters had agreed to the men's terms. It was stated on March 16 by the officials of the men's unions that some 60 out of the 250 employers in the trade, and these including some of the most important ones, had settled with the men.

There are about 1,500 Jewish men working tailors in Manchester and Salford, and it is said that four-fifths of them belong to the Manchester branch of the Amalgamated Society of Tailors and Pressers. Before the dispute began the officials stated that the average wages for the average workman worked out at about $7.50 per week all the year round. For this wage they worked sixty-three hours a week, and although paid by piecework they were not allowed an extra rate for overtime. Of course tailors and pressers are divided into various classes, and the head tailor and the second tailor, for instance, obtain better wages than the third or average tailor. But the hours are the same. The men state that their working conditions have not improved for twenty years (the date of the great labor dispute), and they ask the Employers' Association for a nine-hour day, or a fifty-two-hour week, an increase in piecework rates and the abolition of sub-contracting inside the works. For the most part the men work for small employers, who are practically sub-contractors as regards the shops, but the men are strongly opposed to the further extension of the sub-contracting principle. The increase in piecework rates would increase (it is said) the average man's wage by some $1.25 or $1.50 a week. The head tailors ask for a minimum of $2.25 a day. The men have also asked for an increase of piecework rates for the women and girls, and the officials state that about 100 girls have joined the union.

At the offices of the men's union on March 16 arrangements were made for "picketing" on March 17, but the feeling was generally expressed that the strike would be only of a few days' duration and that the employers would accept the men's programme.

I described in these columns about a year ago a remarkable play produced in London under the title of "The Five Rothschilds." This play was actually the early history of the famous Rothschild family, one of the scenes being played in the old house in Jews Lane, Frankfurt, which is the birthplace of the family. This play about the Rothschilds is to be followed by a play by a Rothschild.

Mr. Hansen is now in Paris arranging for the production of a new play by Baron Henri de Rothschild, which will be brought out in London shortly, in advance of its representation in Paris, where its fortunes will be intrusted to M. Guity. Baron Henri de Rothschild is briefly described in the directory as "Doctor, administrator of the Northern Railway and man of letters," and his activity in all these fields is prodigious. He has performed very good work in the direction of preventing the adulteration of milk and affording gratuitous medical aid to the poor all over Paris, besides spending large sums in a quiet way in otherwise benefiting the needy. He is the principal shareholder in the Northern Railway and a prolific writer on many subjects, though his great ambition has always been to make his mark as a dramatic author.

Baron Henri de Rothschild has already produced plays in Paris, and he is a familiar figure before and behind the scenes in most Parisian theatres. His new play, which is entitled "Croesus," deals with one of the phases of the supposed disabilities of great wealth. The conjunction of the name of the play with that of the writer is singularly appropriate. It might be expected that the author would deal with gigantic financial transactions or the unlimited power of money, but the Baron has chosen a simpler theme, and treats of riches in relation to love, and in so doing has found a very original platform on which to build up his plot and moral, which will certainly strike audiences sympathetically.

All, however, that can be said at the present moment is that the London public will have an opportunity of judging for themselves either at the end of April or early May. Mr. Hansen has not yet decided which theatre he may lease or what actor will be given the leading role in "Croesus." The principal female part will probably be offered to Mlle. Gabrielle Dorziat, the charming young artiste now playing Jeanne in Maurice Donnay's feminist comedy, "Les Eclaircissements." Mlle. Dorziat speaks English well, and should she appear in London she is sure of rapidly becoming a popular favorite. Except Mme. Simone, it would perhaps be difficult to find another actress equally equipped to please an English audience. It only remains to be added that "Croesus" is a three-act play, which is hard to classify; in this respect somewhat resembling "Milestones." "Play," however, is quite as good a name as "comedy," "drama" or "tragedy," for the fanciful staging of a phase of real life, which is mostly made up of these elements.

The position of Jews College as a training ground for the ministry has often been attacked. The institution has, however, many friends, headed by Sir Adolph Tuck, and he is a zealous raiser of funds. It is pretty generally admitted, however, that the college is overstocked with students, and this is a mistake. There are few vacancies and the number of ministers waiting for posts is a more serious matter than the community seems to realize. After many years of arduous work men leave the college equipped in every way for the ministry, and neither the college nor the community cares what becomes of them. It is this tragedy that creates a problem. The community points to the "excess of ministers, over available posts and says: "The college is training too many." The college turns to the community and says: "We have here the potentiality for some twenty more unemployed, which we ask you to subsidize for such time as we turn them out useless for everything except the ministry, which has no place for them." The stranded ministers live on hope, kicking their heels, existing as they can. It is a state of affairs that is degrading an iniquitous. While it is allowed to go on the college cannot expect to command more support. All Sir Adolph Tuck's eloquence and zeal cannot remove this shame, and till the measure of supply and demand

At the latest meeting of the Jewish Religious Education Board a special welcome was extended to Dr. Joseph H. Hertz, and the meeting was, in fact, the first public function of the Chief Rabbi, who has become vice-president of the board. The annual report opens with a reference to a considerable increase in the board's activities. "It will be recollected," it says, "that on the occasion of its last appeal the board called attention to the large number of children who, according to the best statistics available, were not receiving any religious education."

The board took measures to trace out the whereabouts of those children with a view of providing for their needs. This was not easy, as there exists no machinery for ascertaining the domicile of the Jewish children attending council schools, but the board appointed a visitor to go from house to house to make the necessary inquiries. Miss Julia Kauffmann, who was engaged for this duty, amply justified the confidence placed in her, and her work was greatly facilitated by the cordial co-operation of the Rev. B.N. Michelson, who pointed out to the board certain districts in Sporeditch where he had, in the course of his duties, discovered large numbers of Jewish children whose religious education was not provided for.

By May last the inquiries had resulted in locating sufficient children in the neighborhood of Rochelle Street School to warrant the opening of classes at that school, and this was accordingly done. Arrangements were made in the expectation that here would be sufficient children in attendance to occupy four rooms and a hall, but when the opening took place the number applying for admission was vastly beyond any estimate that had been made, and it was necessary to secure the whole of the accommodation the school provided and to engage twelve teachers. The number of children on the roll is 519, and J. Napper has been appointed superintendent.

Rosh Chodesh Nisan benschen this Sabbath.

Is a rabbi the man whom the people elect to be their rabbi? If this be so, why have we yeshiboth with courses both long and arduous?

The Jewish Herald trumpets forth, on its title page, the fact that it is fearless, progressive and independent. Since this publication emanates from Los Angeles, why not say at once that it is Bull Moose?

Rabbi Solomon Foster's report as corresponding secretary of the "annual picnic," as published in the most recent of the year books of the Central Conference of American Rabbis, is a literary treat. To take him by his printed word, the "annual picnic" is "of commanding influence and worth" and "a great and splendid body." Such "puffs" do not even "listen well."

The Jewish Publication Society of America has caused to be prepared a most interesting programme of exercises to mark its twenty-fifth anniversary. The celebration begins to-morrow evening in Philadelphia, and will last over the following day. Here we would simply congratulate the society on this auspicious event in its history. Next week we shall return to the subject at greater length.

Why do not the members of the Free Synagogue nominate Dr. Stephen S. Wise for mayor of this city by petition? We make the suggestion seriously. The office is an important and ungrateful one, and the problems its occupant must grapple with are vast and perplexing because they are so largely a part of our daily life. If Dr. Wise were thus nominated, the fall campaign would have an enhanced interest for us Jews. Then, too, he might be elected—but we shudder to contemplate, etc. Even his defeat would be useful to his successful adversary, for the campaign would yield a bumper crop of thoughts on how to run the office, couched in language that Sir James Murray could envy.

The National Conference of Jewish Charities has created a new standing committee on Palestinian charities, which action calls for comment from us. Nowhere in the field of Jewish charity is the modern and scientific attitude and method of treatment more needed than in the case of the Chalukah and its ramifications. For, in their case distance and the growth of a system, or lack of system, have combined to render precarious the giving that is the result of the olden Jewish feeling of Zedakah. Precarious in divers senses, not the least important of which is that referring to the recipient. Here one may find an excuse for the existence of the paid charity worker, whose field is card-catalogued and systematized, as if he dealt in commodities rather than in poor human souls.

Professor Ignaz Goldziher, of the University of Budapest, is the greatest Mohammedan scholar of the world to-day. His Arabic studies have brought him much fame, and when he visited America, some nine years ago, institutions of learning and academies of science delighted to do him honor. The professor is a member of many European societies and incidentally of the celebrated Imperial Russian Academy of Sciences in St. Petersburg. His membership in this body gives him the right to unrestricted ingress and egress to and from the Empire and to unfettered journeys within that country itself. If Professor Goldziher wishes to avail himself of the privilege, it is well for him that he has it, for he is a Jew, and a conforming one at that. Now, in May a conference of academies will be held at St. Petersburg, and Professor Goldziher was delegated then and there to represent the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. As soon as he learned that special permission to visit Russia would be accorded him, because he is a Jew, Professor Goldziher declined to enter the country, and the Hungarian savants will be unrepresented at St. Petersburg next month. Thus this modest scholar, by his simple and unaffected action, shows that he holds his principles most dear, that he does not fear to stand up before the world and declare his unwillingness to be looked upon as anything but a Jew of the Jews by Russia. Israel is proud of Ignaz Goldziher!

AN UNFORTUNATE CAMPAIGN

WE refer by our title to the present Parliamentary inquiry in England as to the relation of certain high officials of the government of George V to the stock operations of the Marconi Company in this country. It would appear that Sir Rufus Isaacs, a well-known member of the Anglo-Jewish community, now the English attorney-general and an important limb of Mr. Asquith's ministry, had invested in these Marconi shares and had induced other prominent Liberal politicians like Mr. Lloyd George, the Master of Elibank, former whip, and others, to participate in the enterprise.

When it is remarked that the manager of the Marconi Company is Sir Rufus Isaacs' brother, and that perhaps a meticulous sense of the duty devolving upon a Cabinet minister ought to have guarded the great lawyer from embarking upon what must, in view of the developments, be regarded as an indiscreet speculation, the sting in the entire situation is withdrawn. All the efforts to make it appear that the attorney-general violated the statutes of the realm, that by sending his congratulatory wireless to Mr. Marconi and Godfrey Isaacs in New York he was dealing in dark and dangerous cryptic utterances, should be looked upon as the work of Sir Rufus Isaacs' political enemies. These, the Conservative faction, are using the incident for all, if not more than it is worth in the task of checking the career of the present English ministry and the advancement of one of its leading members.

If, by reason of the disclosures at this legislative inquiry, Sir Rufus Isaacs' march to the Lord Chief Justiceship of England is cut short, all men who admire genuine ability and worth will be sincerely sorry. The European correspondent of an important daily newspaper of this city suggests that "below the surface (of the inquiry) political rancor, personal animosities and even racial hatreds were smoldering." This last feature we note with keenest regret, for this is an unnecessary and a gratuitous incident of a simple investigation of actual governmental conditions. That it has moment is apparent when one remembers that in the last few months the English Conservatives, and especially their journalistic organs, have waged a veritable warfare of abuse against the Jewish Cabinet officers and members of Parliament, employing tactics in this connection as unfortunate as they are despicable.

The jubilee of the House of Romanoff was naturally made the occasion for wholesale exercise of the Imperial pardoning power by Czar Nicholas II. Characteristically enough, he liberated criminals, even a murderer in one instance, while the political prisoners were not for one moment considered to be worthy objects of the ruler's clemency and magnanimity in his hour of rejoicing. And then one wonders when the Nihilists of Russia temper despotism by assassination!

The English provinces are waking up to the need of forcing the hand of the government of George V. on the subject of the Russian passport, and in this respect afford a welcome change from the accepted attitude of their Jewish brethren in London. The need to which we refer is as apparent in their case as it was in ours, and English public opinion must be stirred to the point where action will result. Although the Czar in these days of the jubilee of his house is overflowing with the milk of human kindness, we fancy the Jews of his domains, not to mention the rest of the world, have little or nothing to expect from him. How much more, then, it behooves Anglo-Jewry to act, especially when the British Foreign Secretary, Sir Edward Grey, who is famous as the parrier of questions and the writer of meaningless letters, will not read the handwriting on the wall?

The twenty-second volume of the year book published by the Central Conference of American Rabbis has just made its appearance, and the editors and association are to be congratulated upon its excellent typographical format. The book contains much that is useful and a little that may take its place under the heading of "unconscious humor." As a specimen of the latter we would remark that, frequently, fairly long speeches in the course of interesting and important debates are credited to "A Voice." This may represent several rabbis or it may stand for one and the same individual, whose modesty is refreshing, or who perhaps does not wish the world to know that he attended an "annual picnic." As it is, this rubric does not reflect credit upon the editorial care of those responsible for the volume. We shall subsequently and at some length consider some of the many important details with which the book deals.

We think the plan proposed by Mayor Gaynor's committee, which undertook a study of the pushcart problem in this city, a good one. The committee makes the suggestion that pushcart peddling in the city streets be prohibited, and that, instead, permanent shelter markets on city-owned property under the Williamsburg and Manhattan bridges and in certain of the smaller-sized parks be established. With the proper regulations, to carry out these views, adopted the day ought not be far distant when the poor pushcart peddler may pursue his humble vocation without fear of molestation by the police or the "street Arab." Incidentally the plan to restrict the number of pushcarts and to provide for a rigid system of licensing the peddlers appears practicable and salutary. What the peddlers and their friends now desire, however, is action! Here is a plan, we think we hear them say, prepared by experts as the result of much careful and intensive study of the question. It is a good plan and should immediately be put into active operation. We need this relief badly and, what is more important, we need it quickly. So there!

THE NEW PARENTHOOD

"If a woman have conceived seed and borne a man child." (Lev. xii, 1).

IT is a healthy sign of the times that thoughtful men and women are interesting themselves, as never before, in the question of the purity and the betterment of the race. Squeamish persons there may be even to-day who object to frank discussions of this subject, preferring the veil of vagueness behind which not only virtue may chastely conceal a blush, but also vice surreptitiously hide a bold gesture, to God's own broad sunshine from which virtue has nothing and vice everything to fear. Pure-minded persons do no longer object to such discussions; nay, they welcome it, well knowing that there can be no holier concern to God and man than the perfection of the choicest creature.

The day a child is ushered into life is indeed a day as glorious and as mysterious as the day Adam and Eve first left the creative Hand of God, and the light of man's soul first broke upon this world irradiating all things and eclipsing the new-born luminaries in brightness. I am always strangely moved before Rodin's stupendously daring piece of marble entitled "The Hand of God," over at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, which essays the artistically well-nigh impossible task of representing the progenitors of the human race half-formed, half-emerged from, half-submerged in, the amorphous clay that is being molded by the Creative Hand. In front of this marble one is bound to forget the apparent anthropomorphism bordering on blasphemy, and abandon oneself to the contemplation of this gripping prophecy in stone whose burden is that man, born of clay, must emerge from his native element, rise above it to yet undreamed heights and finally flick off the last and least speck of dust that clings to his garment, to tower above the material world a Son of God, transfigured in truth, goodness and holiness. Should not this same vision of the Hand of God holding the ill-defined Life that is to become Soul, appear before every father and mother the day a child is ushered into their home? Should they not be overwhelmed by the mystery of creation which is being enacted before their very eyes, in which they are privileged to become unwitting, blind and blundering participants?

Thoughtful, pure-minded parents are overwhelmed and overawed by the sacred experience of parenthood. They see the vision. They are enfolded in a sense of impenetrable mystery. They are upborne by the prophecy, voiced in the first cry of every new-born child as it crosses the fateful threshold, that the human race will in the end fulfill its destiny and reach the loftiest peaks in its ascent Godward. What wonder, then, that they would fain lift the veil of mystery if but ever so slightly in order to be enabled consciously and with holy zeal to speed the prophecy of a race perfected and purified in the sight of the Lord? What wonder that they stand by the Gates of Life and listen to the faintest whisper coming from the Beyond which might reveal to them the secret of those forces that operate for the refinement of the human stock?

It is much to be doubted whether this secret will ever be known. Modern efforts by way of education and legislation will hardly ever result in the scientifically bred family. But negatively, we may eventually succeed in eliminating the unfit, the defective, the criminal. Whatever may be the ultimate outcome of the modern interest in the question of the race, one cannot fail to notice its tremendous moral import. Parental responsibility is no longer restricted to a limited sphere of duties, but is widened to take in the awful implications, long misunderstood but now revealed in the light of Science, of the Scriptural saying: "Visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children of the third and fourth generation of them that hate me." Nor is parental responsibility restricted to one's immediate offspring;—it is extended to the end of time and its scope has become the entire human race. Every man an Adam—every woman an Eve—from whom all succeeding generations are to derive blood, brawn, brain: this is the meaning of the—New Parenthood!

The ideal of the New Parenthood opens up a vista that stretches away into the future generations. It is based upon the conviction that man is the instrument of God for the establishment of the reign of righteousness upon earth; and the perfection of the instrument is a pre-requisite of its efficiency. It is further based upon the belief in the infinite possibilities of unfoldment latent in the human race. Who can deny that we are but at the beginning of the beginning? Who can foretell with any measure of certainty whether, under a wiser, saner, purer system of living, man may not develop new powers, may not develop into a new being as superior to us as we to-day are to the caveman? We can but dimly foresee the purple dawn of a better day; we can but listen deeply moved to the prophecy voiced by each new-born babe; we can but worship in awe the God who is concealed in mystery yet revealed in mercy through the clay that is made to throb with His spirit. Yes, and we can live in holiness and purity, handing down, to those that are to come after us; the Torch of Life—undimmed!

Zionists are prone to declare that the history of the Jews in the Diaspora is the history of anti-Semitism. If they prove their thesis, or think they have demonstrated its verity, the plain logic of the cause they adhere to is at once apparent. This theory of Jewish history of post-Biblical times leaves out of consideration, however, the internal life of the Jewish people themselves, a fact of equal importance with the course of external events. Moreover, this anti-Semitic view of Jewish history is incorrect in its premises and unfortunate in its philosophic outlook. The former may be explained by the statement that in such a view of Jewish history what shall be said of the fact that the Jews have persisted throughout the centuries of persecution and have survived every anti-Semitic campaign, large or small, against them? The latter results in making the holder of the theory extremely pessimistic in his point of view and more than fearful and anxious as to the future of the Jews. The inconsequentiality of both these positions stands out in bold relief when one simply recalls that vast numbers of American Jews, or Jews born or domiciled by choice in the United States, have managed to worry along with the form of faith known as "American" Judaism, and still deem themselves, and be taken for, Jews.

Rabbi Moses Perez Jacobson, of Shreveport, La., has issued his address entitled "Is This a Christian Country?" The pamphlet contains, in reality, two sets of remarks, the main theme, a recent Friday evening discourse, going somewhat fully and painstakingly into all phases of the question, and brief remarks at a school-board hearing on the subject of religious exercises in the public schools. We may remark that Rabbi Jacobson writes well and interestingly on his chosen theme. He has made careful and capable investigations in all divisions of the problem, and is even prepared to subscribe to the Jesus-myth, by way of indicating his disbelief that this is a Christian country. While his arsenal of legal arguments is fairly complete, his weapons represent the decisions of local courts in Louisiana, not so well known or frequently cited as the opinions of more influential tribunals. On the whole, the pamphlet is well worth reading.

We much regret that, in proposing deserved honors for Rabbi Nathan Krass, of Brooklyn, we should have quoted his illuminating words from some source which garbled them. Let us lay the pearls, for such they really are, before our readers:

Israel gave the world a vessel filled with a cargo of justice and idealism. If battered by time the vessel needs modern refurbishing, let us do it, but save the cargo. With the hammer of progress let us forge on the anvil of the present the golden link that will connect with the chain binding the remotest to the most recent generation. And when for the Jew the last milestone will have been passed may the vision of the first be blended with the glory of the last and youth place reverently the rose of love and loyalty in the hand of mellowed age.

All this reminds us of the old Greek adage: Ifsochysso, ifnotwhy-not!

Dr. Stephen S. Wise, at the Free Synagogue last Sunday, told his "flock" that orthodox and liberal Jews must stand together against faithlessness. Some weeks ago in London Claude G. Montefiore, spiritus rector of nearly all that calls itself ultra-radical Judaism in America, contended for the essential unity of all divisions in Jewry against indifferentism, the common enemy. This being so, Dr. Wise was well moved to bring his congregation in line with the dictum of the Cardinal of Liberalism.

Over in Newark a proposal has been thrown out for the conversion of the entire body of Jews of that city to the dominant faith. It proceeds from the overheated, surely overzealous, brain of one of the "knightly" meshummodim. This representative of the gentry is taking himself quite seriously, since he, a Toronto worker, succeeded in putting himself and a so-called "parish house" between his Christian "admirers" and $50,000 of their money. We believe, however, that the Christians of Newark are made of sterner stuff, that they will "worry along" without caring if Newark Jews remain such or not. The Newark Jews themselves are, of course, in no danger at all from the campaign about to open against them. The meshummodim must "throw his bluff for the coin" and the Jews will not pay the slightest heed to him. One of these days Christian sympathizers will awake to see that the meshummodim need conversion to honest ways, and not the Jews.

When the Governor of New South Wales was about to return home to England on leave of absence a public dinner was tendered him by representatives of all sections of the general community. At first a Friday evening was fixed upon for the function as the only available evening. But on account of the sensibilities of the Jewish community the date was changed. Here is something for Mr. Moses Fraley, of St. Louis, to think over! We wonder what would be his influence in Sydney Jewry!

PENNY POSTAGE.

Probably the greatest forward stride made by any department of the United States government is that of the national post office system. The vast extension of the rural delivery system and the introduction of the parcel post system have practically revolutionized the workings of this greatest government agency.

The appropriation made by the Sixty-second Congress for the post office for the year 1913-1914 was $285,376,000, and the amount of estimated revenue expected is $282,000,000, which makes this branch of government practically self-supporting; and when one contemplates the extraordinary success of the parcel post system the likelihood is that there will be an appreciable surplus.

This is a wonderful exhibit when compared to the large deficits which the post office showed annually for so many years.

In view of this splendid condition, which indicates a continual improvement in the credit side of the ledger, isn't it about time that the Postmaster General and Congress should devote themselves to the introduction of penny postage, at least for letters, mailed locally—in the cities?

It seems to be quite an anomalous condition that if one posts a letter, say, in the city of New York, its destination being in the city, about a block or a mile from the residence of the sender, that the cost of the postage should be two cents, while a letter sent to England or the British Isles or Germany is carried for two cents; and an equal amount carries a letter to California and all the States.

A uniform rate of two cents for a block or ten thousand miles! Seems odd, but that's what it is.

It has been demonstrated by experience that the reduction of local railroad fares has given a wonderful impetus to travel and added most profitably to the traffic receipts, so it would be likewise with the reduction of postage rates locally to "one cent," would probably quadruple the volume of correspondence and add to the income of the post office, so that a gain and not a loss would be sustained.

Modern Pulpit Topics.

Pity the creatures called Modern preachers.

Sweating like dwellers in the tropics, in their unceasing quest of "features"—Sensational pulpit topics!

Say you: But there's the good old Bible, Full of unequal'd inspiration, Old-timer you! That book is "tribal," Vain relic of a "narrow" nation.

Say you: But there's the keen Gemorrah.

Fine gems of Agadah and Midrash? Back to the Pale with such a horror! You are behind the time—out of "fash!"

You're just a greener, plain Chaym Shmendrick!

Whom a musty volume so allures— For a topic read Mister Hendrick Who invades the pages of McClure's!

Or if that gets somewhat old and stale For matinee-mobs, "goils and fellers," Preach on the latest novel or tale, Get your topic from the "best-sellers!"

Preach on Miss Glyn or Victoria Cross, Preach on vaudeville, preach on the drama, Preach on politics, preach on the "boss," Preach on the plumber, or th' embalmer.

Preach on baseball, preach on race-horse, On Bergson the French, Nietzsche the German,

Shaw the Hibernian, Ibsen the Norse— Put them, drag them, into your sermon!

LIFE'S STRUGGLE

By G. GARRY, M. D.

Dedicated to the memory of the late Dr. A. E. Isaacs.

What a gloomy transformation
Into pale and languid death;
And the I of yestermorn
Has become a fleeting breath.

"What availeth all this struggle?"
Ask you, "why combat such ruthless fate
When on death's devouring Altar
We are destined soon or late?"

'Tis well true. The autumn breezes
Chill the heart and pass away;
Rosebuds greet the spring's arrival—
Scent the air and then decay.

And the pealing of the thunder
Soon assumes a gone-by trance;
All our hopes and dreams of childhood
Oft are met by rude mischance.

But the fragrant rose awakens
New born hopes and hearty cheers,
And the autumn breeze is laden
With all seeds for future years.

And the pealing of the thunder
Brings us light and fruitful rain;
In the strifes and hopes of childhood
Treasured lies our wisdom's gain.

And altho' you weary ploughman
Plants the seeds with passing mind,—
Soon the wheat and golden cornflakes
Will the mills his harvest grind.

And altho' the corpse lies pulseless,
Motionless with ghastly eye,
Still its higher self is with us—
Deeds of great men never die.

But their spirits when transmuted,
Struggle on in yonder sphere,
And their striving finds reflection
In our earthly being here.

JEWES AND SCIENCE

gradually injecting the diphtheria toxin into a horse an anti-toxin accumulated in the blood. The blood of the animal was withdrawn and the serum used to combat the ravages of the disease with wonderful results, as the world is aware.

But how were we to explain all this? Again making use of his fundamental idea, the lock and chain system, Ehrlich evolved his now celebrated theory known as the side chain theory. Without going into details which would lead into many technicalities, some idea of it may be given. Ehrlich conceives toxic substances to possess certain atomic groupings which makes them fit into groupings possessed by the cell. These atomic groupings of the latter act as the conveyors of cells—they regulate the intake and output to and from the cell. The toxic substance, however, by combining with them, destroys this indispensable action for the normal function of the cell. Still, if the poisonous dose be not too large the cell immediately creates more atomic groupings to take the place of those that had become useless; and this manufacture of these groupings is so rapid that more of them are created than can be found room for in the cell. The excess of these break off, drift into the blood stream and neutralize the toxins there. By repeated small injections of toxic substances, these neutralizers, or autotoxins, accumulate, and it is blood containing these that is used to combat disease.

A subject that demanded Ehrlich's attention for some time was the cause of snake poison. It was known that the poison worked destructively by dissolving the red blood corpuscles. Ehrlich showed that this was due to a substance, hemolysin, present in the poison, which combined with lecithin, a compound of phosphorus very widely distributed in the body, and that this combination had the power of dissolving the hemoglobin.

Ehrlich's work has emphasized the paramount importance of applying chemical principles, and working along chemical lines in medicine. That has been most forcibly brought home in one of his latest and most wonderful discoveries—a cure for syphilis. Working on the principle he ever keeps in mind, that substances act specifically, Ehrlich prepared no less than 606 arsenical combinations (hence the name 606) before he got one, dioxydiamidoarsenobenzol, which proved to be a specific cure.

Another arsenical preparation of his "atoxyl" (arsenophenylglycene) is being used with much success in cases of sleeping sickness. In this case Ehrlich pointed out a very instructive lesson, and one which we are very apt to overlook. He found that mice when injected with trypan red (a dye) were cured of sleeping sickness, though outside of the body trypan red had no effect at all. This sharply differentiated test tube from body experiments. Though the two very often go hand in hand, and though the test tube is an invaluable aid, the fact that differences are quite possible should always be kept in mind.

Mrs. Marks, wife of Dr. Marks, Ehrlich's assistant, says of Ehrlich: "There are several salient features of Professor Ehrlich's mind that stand out as characteristic and individual. He is gifted with a remarkably quick perception; whatever is before his eyes he sees at once in its full significance. He reads only what interests him: in medical literature only what bears directly on the subject with which he is laboring, and by way of amusement principally light detective stories—American dime novels for the most part (which, by the way, have been abundantly translated into German). In all his reading, just as in his work, Ehrlich has the gift of picking out the essential points with lightning rapidity. His method is first empirical and only subsequently constructive; as, for instance, in his work on sleeping sickness, he first tried out hundreds of drugs, then picked out those that were in any measure effective, and upon these as a foundation he built until he reached the desired goal.

Ehrlich believes firmly in absolute concentration—concentrated work along one line and concentrated amusement in hours of recreation.

Perhaps his greatest gift of all is his remarkable imagination. He has said of himself that his most powerful asset is his "chemical imagination," which is unique. Although he has never studied chemistry much in the conventional way, and during his student days never attended his chemistry lectures, he possesses an unrivalled knowledge of the properties and actions of organic chemicals (those derived from the vegetable and animal kingdom), especially the dye stuffs.

Contrary to usual chemical methods, he never works quantitatively, and really with a definite end in view. To use his own words, he is a play chemist (spiel-chemie), and is simply used as a means towards an end: that of curing disease, and of explaining the phenomena of the action of chemicals upon the human body. In this connection, even the most fantastic ideas are worked out experimentally, for Ehrlich says that through his experience, wherein chance has played a considerable part, he has learned that nothing is to be regarded as ridiculous or barren until it has been actually proved so.

The following is a list of the positions Prof. Ehrlich has held, the titles that have been bestowed upon him, and the honors he has won:

- 1878-1883—Assistant in the medical clinic of von Frierichs in Berlin.
- 1885-1887—Assistant in the medical clinic of Gerhardt in Berlin.
- 1884—Received the title of professor from the Prussian Government.
- 1887-1890—Furnished and maintained a private laboratory.
- 1887—Made instructor (privat-docent) of Internal Medicine by the University of Berlin.
- 1890-1895—Given a place for his own laboratory by Professor Robert Koch in his institute in Berlin.
- 1890—Received the title of Professor Extraordinary from the University of Berlin.
- 1896—Became director of the Royal Institute for Serum Research and Serum Testing in Steglitz, near Berlin.
- 1897—Received from the Prussian Government the title of Geheimer Medicinabrat.
- Since 1899—Director of the Royal Institute for Experimental Therapeutics in Frankfurt-on-the-Main.
- 1900—Delivered Croonian lectures in London.
- 1903—Received from the King of Prussia the "gold medallion for science" for the work on immunity.
- 1904—Visited the United States and delivered lectures in several of the large Eastern cities. Received the degree of LL.D. from the University of Chicago.
- Since 1906—Director of the Georg Speyer-Hans in Frankfurt-on-the-Main.
- 1907—Delivered Harben lectures in London, and received the title of Doctor of Science from the University of Oxford.

1907—Received the title of Geheimer Obermedizinalrat from the Prussian Government.

1908—Received the Nobel prize, with Metchnikoff, for the work on immunity.

SOCIAL.

The Sisterhood of Temple Beth Israel Bikur Cholim will hold a charity whist on Wednesday evening, April 9, 1913, at the Hotel Bon Ray, Ninety-second street and Madison avenue, the proceeds to be devoted to the poor for Passover supplies.

Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Wasserstrom entertained a number of their friends at dinner on Sunday last at their residence, No. 108 West 120th street. Mr. and Mrs. Wasserstrom will soon leave for their country place at Tannersville, N. Y.

The annual benefit given by Lew Fields for the Hebrew Sanitarium of Rockaway Park was given last Sunday night at Weber and Fields' Music Hall. Many prominent actors and actresses appeared, and the receipts are estimated at $4,500.

Miss Estelle Deutsch, of No. 1800 Crotona avenue, entertained a number of friends last Saturday night in honor of Miss Therese Meuer, whose engagement to Mr. William B. Deutsch was recently announced. Louis F. Meuer entertained with his original compositions, and during the evening the engagement of Miss Gertrude E. Eichenbaum, of Chicago, Ill. to Mr. Harry S. Deutsch was announced.

The musicale and dance given by the Misses Florence H. Bayer, Mary Beriman and Mildred Cohen, at the Hotel Bon Ray, on March 29, 1913, for the benefit of the Maskel El Dol, proved a great financial as well as a great social success.

Under the auspices of the Rose N. Lesser Auxiliary of the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society a high-class vaudeville performance will be given on Sunday, April 6, at the Liberty Theatre. A magnificent programme has been arranged, and the proceeds will be devoted to the Home of the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society, at 229-231 East Broadway. The demands made upon the institution have been so large recently that additional funds are urgently needed.

Lakeview Home. The annual meeting of Lakeview Home will be held on Sunday, April 6, 1913, at 3 o'clock, in the vestry rooms of Temple Emanu-El, Forty-third street and Fifth avenue. Reports of officers and chairmen of committees will be submitted.

All interested in this work for wayward girls and unmarried mothers with their babies are welcome.

The Lakeview Home Committee of the Council of Jewish Women cordially invites its friends and all interested in the training of wayward girls to an informal reception, to be held at the Lakeview Home, Arrochar, Staten Island, on Wednesday afternoon, April 9, 1913.

Directions for reaching the home. Take elevated train or subway to South Ferry, then the Staten Island ferry. On leaving the boat turn left to South Beach train, getting off at Arrochar station. Keep to the right, a five-minute walk to the home, a red brick house with green tiled roof. A Reception Committee will be on the 1.30 boat from New York to meet the guests.

MUSIC AND DRAMA.

Another busy week is scheduled at the Metropolitan beginning next Monday, when the last week but one of the present season will be ushered in with "Boris Gudouponov," given with Didur and the original cast. For Tuesday an all-star presentation of "Aida" is scheduled, with a cast embracing Gadski, Homer, Caruso, Amato and De Segurora. "Die Meistersinger" will be Wednesday night's opera, with Gadski, Matfield, Urhus, Beurs, Braun and Hinshaw. A special matinee performance at popular prices of "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Pagliacci" will be given on Thursday, and on the same evening "Koenigskinder" will be sung by Farrar, Jorn and the usual cast. Fremstad, Gadski, Urhus, Beurs and Griswold will appear in "Tannhauser" on Friday, and at the Saturday matinee "The Huguenots" will be given, with Destinn, Hempel, Altch, Caruso, Gilly, Braun and the usual cast.

Jacques Kasner, a young American violinist who has had a successful career abroad, returns to his native heath and gives a recital at Aeolian Hall on Friday, April 11. Mr. Kasner's programme will include compositions by Nardini, Bach, Sinding, E. Moor, Kriesler and Wieniawski.

An interesting recital was given by Wilhelm Bachenhelmer, baritone, at Aeolian Hall, last evening. Mr. Bachenhelmer was particularly pleasing in groups of songs by Schubert, Schumann and Brahms. His programme also included compositions of Fritz Fleck, Keger and Herrman. Coenraad V. Bos was at the piano.

Lovers of piano music have a treat in store for them at Aeolian Hall next Saturday afternoon, April 5, when Mrs. Fanny Bloomfield Zeisler will give a recital. Her programme is as follows: Etudes Symphoniques, op. 13 (by request) Robert Schumann, 1810-1856. Ballade, op. 38, Mazurka, op. 7, No. 1. Etude, op. 25, No. 7. Frederic Chopin, 1810-1849. Etude, op. 10, No. 5. Valse, op. 42, No. 2. Prelude, in D minor, No. 24. Prelude, in C sharp minor, No. 10. Th. Otterstroem Fugue, in C sharp, minor, No. 19. Romance, No. 9, from op. 24. Jean Sibelius, 1865. No. 6, from "Piano Pieces", op. 25. Christian Singing, 1856. Gavotte, op. 144 (apres op. 126, No. 3) Cecile Chaminade, 1861. Mephisto Waltz (Der Tanz in der Dorfschenke, 2te Episode aus Lenau's Faust). (By request). Franz Liszt, 1811-1886.

Loudon Charlton announces Efrim Zimbalist's farewell recital in Carnegie Hall Sunday evening, April 27. The Russian violinist will sail for Europe on April 29. For his farewell appearance Zimbalist has arranged a programme of exceptional interest.

Robert Hilliard, in his fifth month of "The Argyle Case" at the Criterion, rouses capacity audiences to enthusiasm while solving the ingenious complications of thrilling twin mysteries in a real detective play, in which real up-to-the-minute detective methods are illustrated and the ditograph and fingerprint process are graphically demonstrated. "The Argyle Case" is not a 'freak drama, but a rational, realistic play, that grips like a handcuff and sustains the quiver of suspense to the final moment. There is an abundance of witty, laughter-compelling comedy blended with its tensely dramatic situations. As a study of scientific detective methods, such as are employed in the famous cases of its co-author, William J. Burns, it is both absorbing and instructive.

Buy United States Tires They cut down tire bills

At the New Amsterdam Theatre in New York city that most delightful of all musical comedies, "Oh! Oh! Delphine," is nearing its two hundred and fiftieth performance, an achievement unequalled by any other theatrical production this season. Surely an enviable record and yet not surprising when one considers that there has not been as worthy or engaging a musical play produced in this country in many a long day. Women like "Oh! Oh! Delphine" for its daintiness, smart gowns and amusing complications; men for its side-splitting humor and jollity. Everybody likes it for the wonderfully catchy music that is whistled in the streets and played in every up-to-date hotel throughout the country. Theatre parties are very much in evidence, especially at the Wednesday and Saturday matinees. In the cast, which has been unchanged since the first night, back in September, are such favorites as Frank McIntyre, Scott Welsh, Grace Edmond, Octavia Broske, Frank Doane, George Stuart Christie, Stella Hoban, George A. Beane, Helen Raymond, Alfred Fisher and a hundred others.

May Irwin, the irrefutable, past, present and forever president of the "Laugh Trust," a comedienne whose iridescent smile puts the "glooms" to rout and sends a pageant of "joys" parading up and down the main street of Hilarityville, is doing just that at the Cohan Theatre, where this irresistible artiste, in "Widow by Proxy," has registered a hit of that genuine quality which pre-sages a long Broadway run.

Adolf Philipp, the popular German comedian, still continues to attract large crowds at his new Fifty-seventh Street Theatre, where he is appearing with an all-star company of clever performers in "Auction Pinocchio," a musical melange in three acts of Paul Herve and Jean Briquet, adapted from the French by Adolf Philipp. The German-American playgoers laughed at "Alma, Where Do You Live?" but they are screaming, at this latest presentation.

The popular duo, Marie McFarland and Madame — will top the bill at B. F. Keith's Bronx Theatre next week. Others here will include Frank Fogarty, "The Dublin Minstrel"; William Macart and Ethlyne Bradford, in "The Second Generation"; Edison's talking motion pictures, showing Edmund Breese in "The Master Mind"; Mike Bernard and Willie Weston, in songs and piano playing; Jungman Family, aerial experts; Minnie Allen, songs; Adonis, "The Act Beautiful"; Cartmell and Harris, the dancing duo, and Robert DeMont Trio in "At the Hotel Turnover." The usual concerts will be given on Sunday.

The policy of presenting vaudeville de luxe at the new Palace Theatre, Forty-seventh street and Broadway, has evidently caught on and the bill presented this week has perhaps never been surpassed at any American theatre before. La Napierkowska in her classic dances, "The Captive" and "The Dance of the Bee," heads the list, and she is surrounded with the following aggregation of talent: Frank Keenan and company in "Man to Man," Elizabeth Murray in dialect songs, the Palace Girls in dances, the Ball Family in a musical and terpsichorean novelty. Swor and Mack in negro delineations, Dolly Connelly and Percy Wenrich in songs, Platov and Novatno in whirlwind dances, Ota Gygi, classical violinist; Paul Dickey and company in "Come-Back," Thurber and Madison and Rayno's bulldogs. Music is provided by an orchestra of thirty under the direction of Paul Schindler. The word palatial hardly does justice in describing the new Palace Theatre.

The Lenox Theatre at 111th street and Lenox avenue are continuing their policy of giving the most up-to-date pictures at all times. For to-day they will show pictures of the Ohio flood and the Omaha tornado. This will be the first showing of the flood pictures, and theatregoers are advised not to miss them.

The commission charged with the consideration of the rights of Russians in Finland has recommended to the Finnish Parliament that Russian Jews be excluded from any extension of rights that may be granted to Russians living in Finland. The dispute between the Russian government and the Finns as to the status of Russians in Finland is a matter of fundamental importance to that country, but it is quite in consonance with Finnish intolerance against the Jews that they should be excluded from any rights or privileges that may be accorded to other inhabitants.

CHILDREN'S PAGE.

RABBI CHANANYA BEN TERADION

Dear Children:

Rabbi Chananya Ben Teradion said: "When two men are seated together without discussing the text of the Torah theirs is, as it were, the seat of the scoffers, as 'tis said: 'In the seat of the scoffers he hath not sat.'" But when two men are seated together and they do discuss the text of the Torah, then the Divine presence rests in their midst, as 'tis said: "Then do they who fear the Eternal discourse with each other, and the Eternal gives heed and hears; and a book of memorial is inscribed in his presence for those who fear the Eternal, and pay respect unto His name." This might be deemed applicable only to two; whence may it be deduced that when only one sits and engages in the study of the Torah, the Holy One, blessed be He, appoints him his reward? Inasmuch as it is said "Let him but sit alone and silently reflect, for He assigns him a recompense."

Before I explain the above saying of Rabbi Chananya Ben Teradion I will tell you something of his life and more especially of his tragic death, for he was one of the ten great martyrs whose merit we invoke on the Day of Atonement that by their tragic deaths for the sake of the Holy name they might atone for our sins.

Rabbi Chananya (or Chanina) Ben Teradion lived about 1778 years ago in the time when the Roman Emperor Hadrian sought to crush the Jewish nation by depriving them of their very source of life—the Torah. He issued a decree that any one who was found teaching the Torah should be punished with a most horrible death.

Nothing daunted by this decree, Rabbi Chananya Ben Teradion, who was a member of the Synhedrion at Jabne, assembled congregations and taught them the Torah.

At that time Rabbi Jose Ben Kisma became very sick and Rabbi Chananya Ben Teradion went to visit him. "My brother Chanina," said Rabbi Jose to his visitor, "do you not know that this nation (the Romans) are ruling by heaven's decree, for they have destroyed His holy temple, have burnt His palace, have slain His prisoners, have caused His best sons to perish, and yet they exist, and I have heard concerning you that you sit and study the Torah and assemble people publicly and a Sefer Torah is on your lap?" "From heaven they will have compassion," replied Rabbi Chananya Ben Teradion. "I tell you words of reason, and you answer me 'From heaven they will have compassion,'" retorted Rabbi Jose. "I wonder if they will not burn you with the Sefer Torah in the fire!" "Rabbi!" exclaimed Rabbi Chanina Ben Teradion, "Think you I will inherit the future life?" "What good deed came to your hand?" asked Rabbi Jose. "Money that I had put away for the Purim feast were mingled together with money I had put away for charity. Thereupon I gave it all to the poor." "If so," said Rabbi Jose, "would that I could share your reward in the future life, and would that my lot were cast with yours." It is said that not many days elapsed and Rabbi Jose Ben Kisma breathed his last, and the most celebrated Romans went to his funeral and great eulogies were pronounced upon him. Upon their return they found Rabbi Chanina Ben Teradion sitting with the Sefer Torah on his lap, publicly teaching the Torah.

They brought him to the executioner and wrapped him up in the Sefer Torah upon a stake of fresh rushes, which they set on fire. They then saturated some woolen rags in water and placed them upon his heart in order that his soul shall not leave his body at once, and thus his torture might be prolonged. "O, Father!" cried his daughter. "In what a state do I see thee!" Said he to her: "If I alone had been burned it would have been hard on me, but now that I am being burned together with a Sefer Torah He who will avenge the wrong inflicted upon the Sefer Torah will also avenge my wrong." Said his disciples to him. "Rabbi, what dost thou see?" Said he to them, "Parchment burning and letters flying!" "Open thy mouth and inhale the flames," pleaded his disciples, who could not bear to see the excruciating torture that he underwent, and thus advised him in order that a speedy death might put an end to his suffering. Said he to them, "Let Him who gave me my soul Himself take it from me, and let me not take my own life." Said his executioner, Calstuniri, to him, "If I will increase the flames and remove the saturated wool from your heart, will you bring me to the life of the Future World?" "Yes," he replied. "Swear to me!" He swore to him. He immediately increased the flames and removed the saturated wool from his heart. Thereupon his soul left his body with purity. Calstuniri also jumped into the flames.

A "Bath Kol," or the echo of a Divine voice, was heard saying, "Rabbi Chanina Ben Teradion, and Calstuniri are appointed for the life of the future world."

"Aren't you afraid you will catch cold on such a night as this, my boy?"

"No, sir. Selling papers keeps up the circulation."

Clara—I must say I think your young man is very forward. If he were mine I'd sit on him.

Gladys—But that's exactly what I do—and he seems to enjoy it.

"So you are a bill-collector?"

"Yes. Here is one—"

"Keep it, my boy, keep it. You seem to have a nice collection there. Far be it from me to break it up."

An announcement in a provincial journal ran:—"The lecture on 'How to be Always Healthy' announced this evening cannot be delivered owing to the fact that the lecturer is confined to his bed with a severe attack of gout."

One day in the British Museum a guide was recounting to a little group of tourists the glories of a battered centaur, when a Chicago meat salesman interrupted with the question:—"Excuse me, sir, but what would they feed a bloke like that on—beef and beans or hay?"

CONUNDRUMS.

If a gentleman desired his daughter to take wine, the name of what country would he use? Port-wine or gal?
