Judaism On the French Stage

By JAKOB VON DURCKHEIM

(Special Correspondence of the Hebrew Standard)

Paris, June 23, 1913.

The efforts of a Jewish family to "break into" aristocratic society forms the subject of "Baptism," the drama which M. Gémier has just put on the boards of the Theatre Antoine. Given at a private performance some time ago, it is now offered to the general public by whom it has been very favorably received. On the play-bills Alfred Savoir and Nozière are credited with its authorship. M. Savoir is the son of a Russian captain of industry, whom the Russian revolution brought to Paris. The pseudonym "Nozière" is borrowed from one of Anatole France's novels, and only thinly conceals the identity of a gentleman whose family name is Weil, and who writes brilliant sketches and criticisms for some of our best journals. The critics are of nearly one mind in pronouncing "Baptism" to be a trenchant, albeit satirical portrayal of certain phases of Parisian-Jewish life. They make allowances for the caricature marking certain scenes, for this feature enables the authors to bring out the truth all the more clearly and significantly.

The play is chiefly concerned with the social aspirations of the Bloch family. The latter came from Frankfort for the purpose of establishing a banking house in Paris. Old M. Bloch is a successful banker and his only wishes in life are that the number of his customers increases daily and his wealth grows greater all the time. But Madame Bloch is very unhappy because she feels herself very lonesome in that Paris, which is so vast and so brilliant. Aristocratic circles are closed to her. And Madame Bloch's only desire in life is to have the entree to such circles. She is thoroughly in sympathy with the old Royal traditions. Did not Henri IV say that Paris was worth a mass? And Madame Bloch thinks it's worth a baptism. But what church shall she select? Here's where the trouble begins. Madame Bloch has quite made up her mind to become a convert, but there are so many religions in Paris—the Jewish being, of course, new religion which he proposes to out of the question. There's Catholicism and Protestantism, each of embrace shall benefit his position in the financial world. At the family right" in politics, that is to say, the militant Royalist party. His sister, Helene, becomes a Catholic so that she may marry an aristocrat. But and enters a convent. The second son, Lucien, is a degenerate, and to him Catholicism appeals, because he regards it as a refuge for the unfortunate and the unhappy. Old man Bloch is as satisfied with Judaism as he would be with any other religion. He by no means undervalues the advantages which baptism would confer, but he does not conceal the fact that unpleasant consequences might also ensue thereby. He cannot, therefore, make up his mind.

The play cleverly depicts a modern cleric in the person of a bishop, the adviser of the family, and who, moreover, is a very able business man. He and the youngest son, André, provide the fun. The latter is a pushing, unscrupulous speculator, who loses no time in making hay while the sun shines. When Helene becomes a nun, the Bloch family lose, at one blow, all the advantages which they fondly expected a change of religion would bring them. The Coissys, a highly aristocratic but poor as a church mouse family, had expected that one of their sons would marry the wealthy Jewess, and they take no pains to conceal their disgust at the excessive religious zeal which prompted Helene to take the veil. Thereupon in order to be rehabilitated in the eyes of society, André insists that the entire family en masse "go over" to Catholicism. And he exclaims cynically: "Without ruining my social position, I can now also marry a rich Jewish girl." These words do not end the play, for just before the final curtain a veritable apotheosis of Judaism is delivered by the old grandmother who has remained faithful to the religion of her fathers.

This play is by no means the first attempt of the newer literature to deal with Judaism. Years ago Henri Lavedan, in "The Prince of Aurec," contrasted the character of Baron Horn, a banker, with a family of degenerate aristocrats. The multimillionaire desires to become a member of the Jockey Club, to be received in high society, and to make the Princess of Aurec his mistress. In pur-which offers certain social advantages. The elder son of the Bloch family shares the ambition of his council, where the subject is discussed, he votes for Catholicism, the faith identified with the "extreme

Last month, the twenty-fifth anniversary of Emperor William's reign was celebrated all over Germany. In connection therewith, the Munich illustrated weekly "Zeit in Bild" brought pictures of the prominent men identified with that reign, statesmen, diplomats, inventors, artists, generals and three captains of industry. One of these is Herr Emil Rathenau, a detailed account of whose career was published in a recent issue of the HEBREW STANDARD.

suance of these aims, he squanders heaps of money without realizing any of them. Later on, an anti-Semitic play by Albert Guinon was produced at the Vaudeville. Nathan Strohmman, the son of the rich speculator, Abraham Strohmman, does not only wish to enter aristocratic society (it is always "aristocratic society"), but he is in love with Jeannine de Barfleure, the daughter of a poor aristocrat. (Here, again, we have the "poor aristocratic.") In order to compel her to love Nathan, the Strohmman buys up all of Barfleure's promissory notes, and offer the family this alternative; marriage or bankruptcy. Jeannine is sacrificed, marries Nathan whom she detests, and to whom she will not remain faithful.

In his "Return from Jerusalem" Maurice Dounay portrays Jewish solidarity, and the supposed power of the Jews. Michael Aubier's love for Judith so absorbs him that he becomes the slave and the prey of his wife. And in conclusion we recall Henri Bernstein's satirical drama, "Israel." Members of an aristocratic club (once more!) conspire against a fellow-member, the banker Gottlieb (who is a Jew and an ardent Republican). Finally Thibault de Clure succeeds in driving him out of the club and endeavors to provoke him into fighting a duel. But now it transpires that Thibault's mother is Gottlieb's mistress, and that the young aristocrat is his son. In spite of that fact, Thibault intends to kill Gottlieb. However, he changes his mind and makes away with himself.

It cannot be said that our people have so far been sympathetically portrayed on the French stage. The reason is not far to seek. French dramatists, as a rule, have only one milieu in view—that of the upper classes. It offers them types not very interesting in themselves, but possessing certain traits that easily lend themselves to satiric treatment. The modest Jew, or for that matter, Christian, content with his religion and his social position, presents no adequate subject for dramatic conflict. But that Jews can be put upon the stage, truthfully and sympathetically, has been proved quite recently by the Danish author, Nathanson, in "Behind the Walls." And in the view of good-natured satire the German stage offers many examples. I

THE MECHANISTIC CONCEPTION OF LIFE

By B. H.

In Dr. Jacques Loeb we have a man in whom the community may be immensely proud, if it views him through his scientific achievements. It is generally conceded that he is the foremost experimental biologist of the day. Some of his work—such as the fertilization of the sea urchin—is simply marvelous. It has opened up vast possibilities. More than any other man, he has dived deep to solve that great riddle—the origin of life; and in this direction his success has been greater than that of any other individual.

In his latest book, "The Mechanistic Conception of Life," he bases most of his views directly upon the results of his own investigations. These views are so radical that even the most extreme reformers in our midst would spurn them.

No doubt the fault here—as elsewhere—lies in a too one-sidedness, in a method of interpretation which takes into account immediate observation, and draws profound conclusions from comparatively simple experiments. On the other hand, much of what he says should be read with care. No serious-minded and earnest individual can afford to neglect Loeb's side of the case.

In connection with the phenomena characteristic of life he begins by pointing out that the first attempt to reduce such a phenomenon—that of the production of animal heat—to physico-chemical terms was made as long ago as 1780 by Lavoisier and Laplace, an attempt which has now been successfully converted into accomplishment. As the author remarks, this work touches the core of the problem, since "oxidations form a part, if not the basis, of all life phenomena in higher organisms."

With regard to the so-called "riddle of life," Prof. Loeb of necessity admits that we are not yet able to give an answer to the question as to how life originated on earth. While leaning towards the idea of Arrhenius that life germs may be driven through space by radiation pressure, he emphasizes the necessity of attempting the other problem—that, namely, of producing living matter artificially. "Nobody has thus far succeeded in this, although nothing warrants us in taking it for granted that the task is beyond the power of science.

Regarding fertilization of the egg, it is shown that only a short while ago this was still "shrouded in that mystery which to-day surrounds the origin of life in general," but the problem is to-day reduced to physico-chemical terms, since activation is determined by chemical or even by mere physical agencies.

Discussing the question of the nature of life and death, "which occupies the interest of the layman perhaps more than any other problem," the author remarks that "we can well understand that humanity did not wait for experimental biology to furnish an answer. The answer assumed the anthropomorphic form characteristic of all explanations of nature in the pre-scientific period. Life was assumed to begin with the entrance of a "life-principle into the body. . . . Death was assumed to be due to the departure of this 'life-principle.'" Scientifically, however, individual life "begins with the acceleration of oxidation in the egg," and "ends with the cessation of oxidation in the body."

Of heredity Prof. Loeb says that it was the "stamping ground for the rhetorician and metaphysician though to-day one of the most exact and rationalistic part of biology." The phenomena of fertilization and heredity "which are specific for living organisms and without analogues in inanimate nature," are both shown to be susceptible of a physico-chemical analysis.

The question of adaptation is next dealt with. "In the answer to this question, the metaphysician finds an opportunity to put above purely chemical and physical processes something specific which is characteristic of life only." But the phenomena of adaptation only cause apparent difficulties because "we rarely or never become aware of the numerous faulty constructed organisms which appear in nature. The number of species existing to-day is only an infinitely small fraction of those which can, and possibly do, originate," but which "cannot live and reproduce."

Lastly, the author discusses the question whether what he terms the "contents of life" or "inner life" (psychical life)—"our wishes and hopes, disappointments and sufferings"—are also amenable to a physico-chemical analysis. In spite of the gulf which separates us to-day from such an aim, he believes that it is attainable. "As long as a life-phenomenon has not yet found a physico-chemical explanation, it usually appears inexplicable." But that in the case of one's inner life such an explanation is possible is shown by the fact that we are able to explain the phenomena of animal tropisms, which are cases of simple manifestations of animal instinct and will, on a physico-chemical basis. Thus, to take as an example the tendency of certain animals—some of them by no means low in the scale of organization—to be attracted to a source of light. "We may already safely state that the apparent 'will' or instinct of these animals resolves itself into a modification of the action of the muscles under the action of light; and for the metaphysical term 'will' we may in these instances substitute the chemical term 'photochemical action of light.'

But the point will naturally be raised: "If we are only chemical mechanisms, how can there be an ethic for us?" The answer is that our instincts are the root of our ethics, and that those instincts are hereditary. The mother loves and cares for her children, not because metaphysicians had the idea that this was desirable, but because the instinct of taking care of the young is inherited. We seek and enjoy the fellowship of human beings because we have a hereditary impulse so to do. "Not only is the mechanistic conception of life compatible with ethics: it is the only conception of life which can lead to an understanding of the source of ethics."

Wherein lies the fallacy of Loeb's arguments? In this: he regards that as soon as a problem is reduced to a physical or chemical phenomena it is solved. That is not so. By reducing it to such a state we can control it to a certain extent—and of course that itself is an immense advantage—but the question still remains: "What is this so-called physics and chemistry?" And we are as remote from answering this as ever.

JEWS AND SCIENCE
BY B. HOROWITZ

CARL L. ALSBERG—Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry of the United States Department of Agriculture

Probably few are aware that Dr. Wiley's successor in the United States Department of Agriculture, Dr. Carl Alsberg, is a Jew. As chief of the Bureau of Chemistry of this department Dr. Alsberg becomes the government's leading chemist, and that is a position which many of our most noted scientists have tried in vain to obtain.

When Dr. Wiley resigned his position some time ago, President Taft sounded the country's leading educators and scientists with the object of having them suggest a suitable successor. Evidently the choice of the majority must have fallen on Dr. Alsberg.

Carl Lucas Alsberg* was born on April 2, 1877, in New York City, son of Bertha (Baruch) and Meinhard Alsberg. From early childhood Alsberg evinced an interest in natural science, especially biology. This was partly due to training and environment and partly to a natural inclination. His father, a chemist of distinction, and one of the first to manufacture organic dyestuffs in this country, was graduated (Ph. D.) from the University of Jena and trained under Wöhler (University of Göttingen), Bunsen (University of Marburg), and Genther (University of Jena). He was assistant to Professor Genther at Jena and Privatdozent in chemistry at the university. About 1865 he became assistant to Professor Chandler in the School of Mines at Columbia College. Later he was chemist to the New York City Board of Health under Professor Chandler. Subsequently he was occupied in chemical manufacture and chemical engineering. He died in 1897. He was one of the founders and first secretary of the New York Chemical Society, from which the American Chemical Society developed. He had given up the academic career in which he had unusual prospects in order to support his wife and parents. But the spirit of research continued to influence the father, and he never ceased to have an active interest in the purely scientific side of chemistry. This point of view was maintained in spite of a very active and rapidly growing business, and at a time when research in theoretical science did not receive the recognition in this country that later was conceded to it. It had an effect in molding the growing mind of his son, which never could have been obtained otherwise.

With a true appreciation, however, of the values of a liberal education, this scientific interest was not allowed to exert a narrowing effect. Young Alsberg was prepared for college by tutors and at the Mt. Morris Latin School, entering Columbia College in 1892. He received the degree of A. B. in 1896.

It was not until Alsberg entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Columbia University, however, that he allowed himself to devote his entire time to scientific work. He graduated with the degree of M. D. in 1900, and received at the same time the degree of A. M. for special research in physiology. During the summers and vacations of the Medical School Alsberg devoted his time to research in physiology with Prof. F. S. Lee, and in biological chemistry with Dr. P. A. Levene, now of the Rockefeller Institute of Medical Research; then associate in chemistry at the Pathological Institute of the New York State Hospitals.

In July, 1900, after graduating from the Columbia Medical School, Alsberg went to Strassburg, Germany, for post-graduate work, where he studied pharmacology under Schmiedenberg, physiological chemistry under Hofmeister, and clinical medicine under Naunyn. Here he also was associated with E. S. Faust, then Privatdozent at the Pharmacological Institute, now professor of pharmacology at Würzburg; also with Wolfgang, Heubner and others. During the succeeding two years his time was devoted almost exclusively to biological chemistry, notably pharmacology, but he continued his interest in clinical and general biological matters, for the study of which there were unusually good opportunities at the University of Strassburg.

During this time he conducted special investigations into the structure and biological significance of the nucleic acids. He went to Berlin in 1901 where he spent a year in chemistry with Emil Fischer and in plant physiology with Kuy. One vacation was spent at Frankfurt-on-Main with Ehrlich, Weigert, Edinger and C. von Noorden in studies especially of the side chain theory and other conceptions of immunity; another vacation was devoted to clinical medicine with Kuttner, Piorkowski and others.

In the fall of 1902 Alsberg returned to this country to accept the position of assistant in physiological chemistry at the Harvard Medical School. In 1905 he was advanced to instructor in biological chemistry and put in charge of the organization of the Department of Biological Chemistry at the new Harvard Medical School. From 1906-1908 he was in charge there (jointly with L. J. Henderson) of the teaching and research in biological chemistry. From 1907-1908 he conducted, in addition, special investigations for the United States Bureau of Fisheries at Woods Hole, Mass.

While at Harvard Alsberg not only organized and developed an efficient and unusual department for undergraduate teaching, but also, as head of the department, put on a firm basis, for the first time in that institution, a system of graduate instruction and research in biological chemistry.

Alsberg's success as a teacher, both of undergraduates and graduates, has been appreciated by all who have come in contact with him. In fact, it has been recognized by many that his gift in this direction is so pronounced that they have repeatedly urged him to devote himself exclusively to teaching. But the strong spirit of research, coupled with his broad biological interests, would not permit him to confine himself to teaching, and when, in 1908, the position of chemical biologist, in charge of the Poisonous Plant Laboratory of the Bureau of Plant Industry in the United States Department of Agriculture, at Washington, was offered to him, he accepted it with the belief that, by freeing himself from the enticing but time-consuming occupation of teaching, he might accomplish more in research. This conclusion has been amply justified by the results of his investigation of poisonous plants, notably the loco weed and the biochemistry of various moulds.

The death has occurred at Dvinsk of Chaim Moshkin, aged 127. He saw Napoleon I. at Minsk in 1812. His mother died at the age of 118. Chaim Moshkin left 116 children, grandchildren, great-grandchildren and great-great-grandchildren.

Much attention has been attracted by an appeal drawn up at Siedlece by many Polish rabbis, condemning dances, the modern conduct of young Jewry, the Jewish newspapers, and modern literature, and urging a return to strict orthodoxy.

The New York City Board of Education has decided to call the new high school now in course of erection in the Manhattan Borough, the "Richman High School" in honor of the late Julia Richman, for many years district superintendent of schools.

Congressman Goldfogle has been named as a delegate to the International Parliamentary Union, which will meet at The Hague in December next. Mr. Goldfogle intends to take up the subject of the persecution of Russian and Roumanian Jews.

The Jewish Colonization Association has decided to cease the maintenance of its Farm School, "Or Jehouda," at Smyrna, six months hence, owing to the financial loss thereby incurred. The families in the little colony will continue to cultivate the land they occupy, but will have to do so at their own expense.

The Jewish Land Settlement of South Africa has been formed at Johannesburg. Its main object is to collect information and then to formulate schemes including, if possible, the creation of a limited company, with the view to enabling Jews to obtain land for farming purposes. Over 200 members have been enrolled.

Among the many Jews and Jewesses who have received the title of Officer of Public Instruction or Officer of the Academy from the French Government are a goodly number of principal teachers of Alliance Israelite schools in Turkey and other parts of the East. Madame Arsene Darmesteter has been appointed officer of the academy.

On the proposition of Mr. Edward I. Mocatta, the Committee of the Spanish and Portuguese Jews' Orphanage in London has decided to suspend certain clauses of its constitution so as to give effect to a request of the Chief Rabbi of Bulgaria that four Jewish children belonging to that country, whose fathers fell in the war, should be admitted into the institution.

At the French Embassy in London during M. Poincare's recent visit, Mr. Maurice Jacobs, French Consul at Brighton, was presented by the Ambassador, M. Cambon, to the President, by whom he was decorated with the Palmes d'Or (Officier de l'Instruction Publique). Mr. Jacobs has now been decorated personally by two French Presidents.

Last month Herr Ludwig Moser, who, since the end of 1874, has without a break held the office of President of the Jewish congregation at Carlsbad, celebrated his eightieth birthday. Prior to the year of 1848 Jews were not allowed to stay in Carlsbad more than four days in succession. Only the Moser family possess the right of permanent residence. The octogenarian is a notable figure in the famous "cure" city, for he holds important public offices as well as responsible honorary positions in his own community, and is decorated with several home and foreign orders.

Quite a number of Jews are included in the honors' list, issued in commemoration of the semi-jubilee of the German Emperor. The most notable is that conferred on Commercial Privy Councillor Eduard Arnold, who has been appointed a member of the Prussian Upper House. He is the second Jew summoned to that House, his predecessor having been Baron Charles de Rothschild, of Frankfurt, who obtained this honor in 1871. Dr. James Simon, who, as is well known, is a personal friend of the Emperor, has received the Red Eagle Order Second Class, and Commercial Privy Councillor Ludwig Max Goldberger the Order of the Crown Second Class in brilliants with the star.

The Young Turk Cabinet, which was formed after the tragic death of Mahmoud Chevet Pasha, is the one that contains elements most frankly and loyally pro-Jewish. His Highness Prince Said Halim, the new Grand Vizier, has more than once shown himself to be friendly to Jews, and the presence in the Cabinet of Talaat Bey—the "Jewish Minister," as he is styled—as Minister of the Interior, is an important guarantee that under his administration anti-Semitism will have to hide its head, and that the interests of the Jews will be scrupulously respected. Talaat Bey, who has a hand of iron, received his early education in a Jewish school. He knows the Judeo-Espagno dialect very well, and also knows a little Hebrew. In accordance with custom, the Chief Rabbi of Turkey has called at the Sublime Porte to tender his congratulations to the new Grand Vizier and his Cabinet. Everyone of the Ministers gave him a hearty reception.

Pressburg Community Acknowledges Thanks.

Mr. M. Engleman, secretary of the relief committee organized by the Congregation Ohab Zedek in aid of the sufferers by the Pressburg fire, is in receipt of a communication from the Jewish communal authorities of Pressburg, in which they express their deep gratification for the efforts of their brethren in America. The letter says: "As the dew softens the earth, so your efforts have softened our burdens, and we especially appreciate your efforts, inasmuch as you are so many miles away from us in fact, but have shown yourselves so near in spirit. Your magnanimous conduct has given us renewed hope. We especially thank Rabbis Philip Klein and Bernard Drachman for their efforts in organizing this committee and also I thank those who so generously contributed toward alleviating our condition."

A Jewish Theological Faculty in Frankfort.

By MARTIN RADE (MARBURG). Translated by Jacques Mayer.

In the April number this periodical, I was permitted to point out the necessity for theological faculties in the universities about to be established in Frankfort A/M and Hamburg. At the conclusion of my article I expressed surprise that from those other scholars who are always glad to have the co-operation of theologians, no voice was heard in favor of our profession. The philologists, historians and philosophers—all were silent.

One historian, however, had answered my appeal. Nay more, he had anticipated it. In the Leipzig Neueste Nachrichten, Lamprecht, discussing the plan for founding a university in Dresden, sharply criticised the short-sighted niggard lines which dictated dispensing with a theological faculty, and proclaimed most vigorously in favor of the same.

But I was even more surprised that Privy Councillor Lamprecht should have approved my plan for a Jewish theological faculty in Frankfort. After expressing to me—under date of April 24—the necessity for theological faculties in general—"on that point," said he, "there can, among men of culture, exist no difference of opinion. His letter continues: "But our agreement goes much further. When the founding of the University of Frankfort was discussed, I replied to a question coming to me from that city, by proposing and recommending in the first place, the founding of a theological faculty in three divisions, one Catholic, one Protestant and one Jewish; and that a part of the social work on behalf of the city's inhabitants—the way of developing charitable institutions should be under the supervision of the three sections of that faculty."

Apparently Privy Councillor Lamprecht assumed that the designed foundation in Frankfort would offer an opportunity for creating a new, original and modern type of university. In that expectation we are to be disappointed. The new metropolitan universities that are to come will seek to justify their right to exist by keeping as close as possible to the methods in vogue in the older institutions. Their plans disclose nothing that is imposing or creatively original.

I take my position, therefore, upon the way things are managed in the old universities. What Lamprecht had in mind was a department of the science of religion in the future republic of learning, which should consider the fact that in the German Empire we have three living religions. Without directly reflecting upon the claims which these religions by virtue of their organizations might have upon the university studies of their future guides or leaders, he saw in the living religions themselves, subjects of study to be pursued by the religious-scientific faculty and he demanded that there be included in the curriculum as a practical matter, methods of philanthropic work. The practical branches of theology should be encouraged, above all, in developing them in the direction of charitable efforts. This he dwells upon in his Leipzig article. As a matter of course he asked that the faculty influence the ecclesiastical organizations. "One must further and help," says he, "the preservation of the church, of faith and of morality." But the chief object, the main reason for this "theological" faculty lies in: Learning, science, investigation of the subject of religion.

Did Dr. Bornemann, the dean of the Lutheran clergymen of Frankfort, know of Lamprecht's opinion when, in the Christliche Welt (No. 9 of this year), he (provided an evangelical-theological faculty was dispensed with) he expressed himself in favor of a "free religious-scientific" faculty, "which could be filled with an equal number of Evangelical, Catholic and Jewish representatives?"

Protestantism and Catholicism have their theological faculties—Judaism has none. Frankfort would appropriately have filled this want. But I put aside the question of locality. I desire only to speak of the fundamental necessity for such a foundation.

First of all, such a necessity should be felt in Jewish quarters. My experience has taught me that it does not exist there to the extent anticipated, by me. Judaism has its seminaries, private institutions, not generally known to the public. Its rabbis learn there their special Jewish knowledge; besides they attend our universities, where they obtain the degree of doctor of philosophy. The method is not at all bad. The ecclesiastical training for the rabbinate at the hands of a confessional institution, the secular education by the philosophical faculty of the university. A separation of church and state—only a personal union of the two powers in educating theologians—is not that modern? Has it not a future? Is it not also an example for the training of Christian clergymen?

Nevertheless, we are still at some distance from the separation of church and state. And Jewish theology shows that such a separation of the vital problems, inherent in the case, does not solve it. Jewish theology complains that it is not sufficiently recognized by Christian theology; a peaceful working together on neutral questions does not take place; when one side touches the other, it does not occur without irritation or disrespect. But really it is not to be wondered at that the science of Judaism should occupy an obscure position, as long as it is not publicly and courageously taught and made accessible to every one. This state of things is not to be altered by merely founding a chair for the Talmud in the department of philosophy. Thereby expression is not given to the fact that to-day Judaism is the vital faith of the 600,000 Germans of the empire, behind whom there stands in the rest of the world a community of more than eleven million. It is merely a chair for history, and for a knowledge of the past.

That of these 600,000 a fraction whose size is difficult to estimate does not believe in anything, constitutes a phenomenon shared by Judaism with the other religions. As with Protestantism, it is divided as far as doctrine and worship are concerned, into at least two divisions, very difficult to bring together. Owing to the much smaller number of adherents, this evil is naturally the cause of much greater difficulties. And this is why the state should step in, not for the purpose of interfering in the more intimate concerns of the church or with the religion, but so that a Jewish theological faculty could be established or made possible.

It is their religion which differentiates the 600,000 Jews from the majority of German citizens. Or is it nationality or race? To-day there are Zionists and anti-Semites willing to answer these questions affirmatively. But the problem set up by Judaism in the German Empire is not to be solved by regarding or treating the Jews as if they were foreigners. Nor is it conceivable that they will in the near future amalgamate with German Christians. On the other hand, it is recognized that out of all proportion to their number, they constitute a most influential factor in our national culture. This factor and its significance should be taken advantage of by the German nation, German science and the German State. And this is to be got at only by recognizing and further cultivating their best possession—the religion. This must be the wish of both Jews and Christians.

Of course one faculty must suffice, and in connection with a Christian faculty. For at first it will not be at all easy to find the instructors. The old Testament, Talmud (Rabbinical Literature), History of Judaism, Systematic Theology (Religious Philosophy and Religious History), Practical Theology—here are five chairs; the last named could be dispensed with, provided connection at the university with Christian practice could in some way be established. Thereby an entirely new task would be found for the Jewish men of learning of the present day. They could show what work they are capable of performing. He Rhodus, hic salta. The Jewish Church would step out into the light of publicity as it has never done before. For in spite of splendid synagogues, it still lives a Ghetto life—in obscurity—known by no one. Some would regard this as liberation, others perhaps, as desecration. But the state would thereby mightily promote culture. That state, of course, to whom the religion of its citizens is not a matter of indifference, which does not seek to influence their belief, but which has a care for the atmosphere in which their religion can only thrive, and contribute to the good of the entire nation.

If I err not it was in accordance with these views that once upon a time Abraham Geiger negotiated with the Prussian Minister of State Eichhorn before the Berlin Jewish Seminary was established. And quite recently Hermann Cohen, in a "jubilee" article on Prussian-Jewish emancipation asked for the same thing. The government must crown the good work of emancipation by including the Jewish religion in the domain of its cultural tasks. "It must not content itself with only overlooking the administration of our congregations, or with contributions to the smaller congregations, when the question of religious instruction is involved." A politically enlightened and just government must concern itself with the scientific fostering, developing and constant expansion of those religions which it officially recognizes. Cohen, therefore, asked in the name of his co-religionists, "that at the universities the science of Judaism should be represented by learned and liberal adherents of our faith." The phrase "learned and liberal" does not signify a liberal reform party, but is to be understood in the self-evident sense that to a university only theologians should be attached, who, whether "liberal" or "conservative," maintain towards the principles of their "free science" an entirely earnest attitude.

Will the present government establish such a faculty? And among the many German kulturstaaten which one? According to its size and power, Prussia would be the one. But it hardly possesses sufficient energy to make a beginning. At all events the subject must be discussed. And it is all the more timely if we are about to enter into an era of new university foundations, particularly under strong private initiative. At some point the spark of a vital thought will kindle. We demand a Jewish theological faculty in the interest of the German nation of culture. We will not oppose confessional Jewish objections until a later time. At present we say with Cohen: "It is the business of the government to see that to the churches are brought the blessings of learning." And rather boldly, but as he meant it, quite correctly: "The science of religion constitutes the best powers of defense and offense of religion."

Hony soit qui mal y pense. In church and state there are many wise people who shrug their shoulders or smile when the smaller congregations are mentioned. But from care for the small and the humble, there finally springs the desire for the greater common welfare. And Judaism should neither be despised or should its self-consciousness be made

The Synagogue Derech Emonah was filled to its capacity last Sabbath and over 200 people were turned away through lack of room. Rev. Dr. H. P. Mendes occupied the pulpit and spoke in "Jewish Independence," drawing lessons from the Fourth of July.
On the same morning Master Arthur Arskowitz, son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Arskowitz, observed his Bar Mitzvah. He read the entire Sedrah, the Haftarah and delivered an address. At the conclusion of his sermon Dr. Mendes feelingly addressed the young confirmand.

STRICTLY KOSHER

I respectfully invite your attention to the superior advantages afforded by REH'S HOTEL and ANNEX for the accommodation of visitors to the Baths of Mt. Clemens. I have expended a large sum of money in their improvement and furnishings. They have no superiors in the city. Hot water in each room.

Hotel and Annex are connected, and both have direct inlets for the passageway connections with the Baths of Arethusa, comprising the latest and finest addition to the bathing interests of Mt. Clemens. The Baths of Arethusa are furnished with every approved idea for the administration of these healing waters, and in addition is a beautiful and luxurious establishment, where it is delightful to take the treatment.

I shall be glad to receive your valued patronage when coming to Mt. Clemens and assure you of every care and consideration. Rates, $18 to $25 per week for room and board. R. M. REH

A Suggestion for Sabbath Observance. Editor HEBREW STANDARD:

I am a butter employed in a wholesale cloak and suit house. I do not work on Saturdays, holy days or holidays. Although my firm does not close, I am fortunate to be allowed to remain away, especially in the busy season. Although I only receive five days' pay in each week, my firm is willing to allow me to do this, but there are many cutters who will not work on Saturday, and, therefore, it is very hard for them to get work. There are also many who do work on Saturday and are praying to get a job to be at liberty Saturday.

I think your valuable paper, in conjunction probably with other Jewish papers, should try and further this suggestion, as all manufacturing of wearing apparel is now in control of Jewish firms and all of them only work one-half day Saturday. I believe it would be very easy, especially among the tailors, to get them to sacrifice that one-half day, and in that way the entire manufacturing section could observe Saturday, then those who work now on Saturday against their will (in fear if they don't they will lose their job), will be able to enjoy the Sabbath. Hoping I have made my purpose understood, I am,

Very truly yours,
HENRY SIMON.

The financial report of the Jewish community of Pesth shows that in the past year the revenue amounted to 2,239,362 crowns and the expenditure to 2,445,814 crowns. The deficit is due to the prevailing economic depression, the communal taxes having produced 155,000 crowns less than had been estimated. The receipts for charitable purposes, however, showed an increase of 70,000 crowns. Building operations for the new Jewish high school are to be begun this year.

Synagogue, London. Mr. Katz, who was born in Wilna, is thirty-two years of age and was selected from 125 candidates. He possesses a beautiful tenor voice and originally intended to sing in opera, but being of a pious disposition, decided to enter the service of the synagogue.

The election of Mr. Samuel Samuel to Parliament brings the number of Jews who are members of that body to seventeen—the largest number that has ever sat at one time. It also brings the number of members with that surname to four. There is a fifth member of that name, Mr. Jonathan Samuel, but he is not of Jewish origin.

At Prushkoff (Russia) the property of a poor Jew was last week sold for fifty-one roubles to realize the fine of 300 roubles for his alleged failure to present his son to the recruiting commission. In reality, however, his son is serving his second year in the army, but the police refused to postpone the sale for the purpose of verifying the fact.

With the passing of Abe Attell and "Kid" Herman there are very few prominent Jewish boxers before the American public to-day. Of the few, Leach Cross, of New York, is well up in the lightweight class, as is Charlie White, of Chicago, many predicting that before long the latter will be champion of his class.

Samuel Mayer, of Cincinnati, has been elected a director of the National Association of Credit Men. There were ten vacancies to be filled, and Mr. Mayer received more votes than any other candidate in the field.

J. Walter Freiberg, Dr. Samuel Iglauer and Henry S. Rosenthal have been nominated on a committee of fifteen charter commissioners, who, under the new Ohio Constitution, are to draw up a new charter for Cincinnati.

NEWS FROM ENGLAND.

(Exclusive Correspondence to THE HEBREW STANDARD.)

Jewish Cabinet Ministers and Rumored Changes—Sir Rufus Isaacs as Possible Lord Chief Justice of England—Outside Interests in Jewish Colonization Schemes—Visit of M. Poincare and His Jewish Welcome—Something About the Samuels—Passing of Broad-Minded East-End Clergyman—London Jewish Hospital Scheme—Need for Cheaper Jewish Literature—The Jerusalem University Scheme.

London, June 28, 1913.

All kinds of rumors are going about just now about approaching Cabinet changes. Most of the great political names are mentioned in the course of one or other of these rumors. So far as the Jewish member is concerned, Mr. Herbert Samuel, it is being whispered that he is to be moved on from the Postmaster-Generalship to the presidency of the Board of Trade. This would be a promotion in the official hierarchy which the Prime Minister and the Liberal party generally would hold to be well deserved. The present president of the Board of Trade would probably be given a title and moved on to a position of greater ease and less responsibility. As to who would take the vacant Postmaster-Generalship rumor gives that to the famous John Burns, who, from being an unknown and despised strike agitator twenty-five years ago, is now a member of the Government at a salary of $25,000 a year and swaggers it at court in regulation costume with the best of them.

With regard to Sir Rufus Isaacs, rumor credits the Prime Minister with the desire to make him Lord Chief Justice of England immediately Lord Alverstone resigns. Mr. Asquith is well aware of the promotion of Sir Rufus Isaacs would at this moment create some criticism in certain quarters, but he has been a practicing barrister himself, and the opinion of the most closely organized of all trade unions, the Bar, weighs more strongly with him than it would with a statesman of the type usually accustomed to be Prime Minister. The Bar, it is freely said in the lobby, takes in the main the side of the Attorney-General in the controversy concerning him which has just been raging, and it is averred that the Prime Minister is prepared to accept this in preference to the opinion of the average man of business or of "affairs," who thinks that it would be well for Sir Rufus Isaacs, in all the circumstances, to possess his soul in patience. It would not be surprising, therefore, if the Attorney-General be raised to the highest active position on the English bench.

Outside the Jewish circles there appears to be as much interest aroused in questions of Jewish colonization as inside the community. This is best proved by the following extract from a leading English daily newspaper which speaks for itself:

Some time ago the Portuguese Government declared its willingness to offer a large tract of land on the Benguela Plateau in Angola for the establishment of a more or less self-governing Jewish colony. The Jewish organization known as the Ito, of which Mr. Zangwill is the leading spirit in this country, and which, as distinct from the Zionists, seek to find a permanent home for the oppressed Jews of Eastern Europe in some part of the world as yet unoccupied, thus ruling out Palestine, sent out to Angola last July Dr. Gregory, professor of geology, at Glasgow, to explore the offered territory and to report on it. His report is now published. On the whole, it is not encouraging. In an appendix to the report Sir Harry Johnston and Mr. Nevinson, who both know the country, give their opinions, which are definitely hostile to the project. Dr. Gregory is much more hopeful, though he admits that he would not advise a Scottish farmer to emigrate to the Benguela Plateau. He also admits that "individual colonization" would certainly fail. But Jewish refugees, he thinks, would be more patient, and might succeed if they were planted there in proper numbers and under the supervision and with the support of a wealthy organization. The soil is fair and the climate excellent. The only existing settlers on the particular area that he has in mind are about a thousand Portuguese traders and some Boers who trekked north after the British annexation of the Transvaal in 1877. But Dr. Gregory insists that no Jewish or any other colony could hope to succeed unless certain political concessions are granted. These are, roughly, the suspension of all customs duties on imports at least for a term of years, and the abolition of preferential duties in favor of Portuguese trade and shipping. Evidently this is the weak point of the scheme. Portugal is hardly likely to grant these demands. Sir Harry Johnston believes that there would certainly be trouble with the natives. Mr. Nevinson does not believe that any white community could thrive under the existing Portugal Colonial administration.

The visit of M. Poincare to this country has been a notable event of the past week, and Jews have been among those who have welcomed him most heartily. They remember the pioneer work which the French nation performed in freeing Jews from fetters dating from the Middle Ages. Furthermore, one hears it recalled how the French people refused to give way to a savage anti-Semitic conspiracy not so many years ago. The chief rabbi attended as a guest at a reception given to President Poincare at the Guild Hall, London, on June 25.

After the return of Mr. Samuel Samuel for Wandsworth, the House of Commons now contains five members of that name, but they are not all related. The two Liberal members of that name, the Postmaster-General and Sir Stuart Samuel, are relatives, but they are not connected with the new member. He is distantly connected by marriage with his Unionist colleague, Sir Harry Samuel. The fifth Samuel in the House is Mr. Jonathan Samuel, M. P., for Stockton, the only non-Jewish Samuel in the House. But there are really five Jewish Samuels in the House, for the Under Secretary for India, Mr. Edwin Samuel Montagu, is a member of the same family as the Postmaster-General, but his branch has changed its name to Montagu.

The election of Mr. Samuel Samuel brings the number of Jewish M. P.'s to seventeen. This is a record only exceeded in Hungary, where there are twenty Jewish members of Parliament. The Jewish members in this country do not owe their seats to Jewish votes as a rule. In only one case, that of Sir Stuart Samuel, the member for a Whitechapel division, can the Jewish vote be said to preponderate. In other divisions, notably the Chesterton division of Cambridgeshire, for which Mr. E. Montagu sits; South Derbyshire, represented by Sir Herbert Raphael; or Cleveland, for which the Postmaster-General is the member, it is open to question whether there is a single Jewish voter in the constituency.

The death of Canon Barnett, a particularly broad-minded clergyman, associated for many years with the East End of London, recalls a number of incidents during his friendship with many Jews of his neighborhood. He was a great man for melting away difficulties. Thus in the early days of the Poor Children's Holiday Fund, there was trouble about the food of Jewish children. Jewish parents were hesitating to allow their children to go. Canon Barnett set himself to get over this, and arrangements were made by which supplies of the proper food were sent out to the centers. Another quality which is not sufficiently noticed in the biographies was his tolerance. He always maintained the friendliest relations with his Jewish neighbors, and co-operated with leading Jews in the establishment of the Whitechapel Art Gallery and many other enterprises. There were never any creed distinctions at his famous social service settlement center, Toynbee Hall, anyone was welcome who would put his back into work for the poor—Anglicans, Non-conformists, Jews, Agnostics. He was no rigid Sabbatarian, and at one time had to meet opposition from the strait-laced owing to his custom of throwing Toynbee Hall open on Sundays for recreative meetings, picture talks, and so on. It is unlikely that anyone will take his place as a raiser of money for good causes. He could get money for anything he advocated; his name was sufficient. His close association with Toynbee had ceased for some years before his health gave way, and to the present generation of Toynbee workers he is little more than a great and inspiring name. Toynbee has been a wonderful nursery of distinguished men.

The London Jewish Hospital Association held a banquet on June 23 at the Monnickendam Rooms in aid of the building fund of a proposed hospital for Jews in London. Private collections and money promised at the dinner, announced the secretary (N. Jacobourley), amounted to nearly $5,000. Dr. N. Gaster, who presided, proposed the health of the King, after which he gave the toast of the proposed Jewish Hospital. They had met that night, he said, to establish a small home for their own sick. If some people stopped their ears they would not stop the inclinations of their hearts. They were gathered to tell the world that in spite of all artificial objections raised against the proposal of the people of the East End $25,000 had come to them, and that they had been able to buy the ground for the future hospital. They intended to work until they had accomplished their desired end.

An interesting discussion, relative to the need of cheaper Jewish literature, took place at the annual conference of the Union of Jewish Literary Societies, held under the presidency of Sir Matthew Nathan, at the Jews' College, London, on June 22. Two resolutions were moved by J. Raphael, to the effect that the union should use its influence in securing cheaper Jewish literature, and that the union should interest itself in securing Jewish literature in the libraries of Jewish institutions and clubs patronized by working men and lads.

During the debate E. J. A. Paiba said that he was afraid that among the rising generation the real old Judaism was on the decline, and suggested that this could only be avoided by fostering interest in ancient Judaism by means of Jewish literature. Rabbi Mendelssohn said they wanted a living kind of literature, such as tracts, written by men of ability; and Mr. Phillips, of Leeds, said that when their students came into contact with the beauty of English literature and its noble traditions they were liable to forget Jewish literature.

Professor Abrahams, of Cambridge, observed that the Jewish students were doing their duty in the two sides of their culture, with ability and devotion. Before they produced cheaper books they had to produce the Jewish buyer. He added that they had no right to ask their men of letters, who, after all, were working men, who had to earn their living, to give lectures without offering them a fee. Both resolutions were carried unanimously.

Reference was made to the progress the union has made under the presidency of Sir Matthew Nathan; and Mrs. Myer Spielman was elected as this year's president.

A meeting of the general executive of the International Zionist Organization was held during the third week of June at the headquarters of the movement in Berlin to decide upon the programme of the next Zionist Congress—the eleventh—which will open in Vienna on September 2. Professor Otto Warburg, chairman of the Central Executive, presided, and representatives were present from Russia, Germany, Austria, Turkey, Bulgaria and Belgium. It was decided that one of the principal questions to be discussed at the forthcoming congress should be the advisability of erecting a Jewish university in Jerusalem. It was recognized that the realization of such a project, in view of the present conditions in Palestine, is somewhat premature, but that the obstacles placed in the way of Russian Jewish students desirous of entering the universities of their native country and of Germany are likely to make the adoption of such a plan a necessity before very long. The reports submitted by the Central Executive upon the general position of the movement, upon its recent political activity, and the latest developments in the colonization of Palestine were approved by the meeting. It was announced that the Anglo-Palestine Company, which has its headquarters in London, has just opened a new branch in Tiberias, being the seventh branch of the Zionist bank in Palestine.

During the proceedings a telegram was received from New York announcing that M. Nahum Sokolow, a member of the Central Executive, had been received at Washington by Mr. Bryan, Secretary of State, who, in the course of a long interview, assured him of his cordial sympathy with the aspirations of the Zionist movement and promised him the friendly offices of the American Government in the endeavors for their fulfillment.

Dr. Faitlovitch, an interview with whom we published in these columns at the time of his visit here some years since, is again traveling among the Falashas of Abyssinia and sends encouraging reports of their condition and prospects to the world. For one thing, the Falashas consider themselves now to be full-fledged members of the House of Israel, and, naturally because of this, the propaganda of the conversionists is making no headway among them. It would seem that Dr. Faitlovitch's diligent work among this section of our people is meeting with its due reward.

We are not prepared to take very seriously the recent statement in Our School Life, a journal issued in the interest of the religious school of Temple Rodeph-Sholom of this city, that the loan of "a most beautiful and artistic miniature Torah" will be made to form the nucleus of a museum of Jewish antiquities. Just as one swallow does not make a summer, so a miniature Sefer does not make a museum of Jewish antiquities. If the persons in authority in the religious school of this congregation earnestly intend to establish a museum of the kind described, let them make diligent efforts to create such in truth. Let them see to it that on all sides of Jewish antiquities their museum shall be adequately eloquent.

The Pilot, the semi-official organ of the Roman Catholic Cardinal Archbishop of Boston, is with the Jews in their opposition to the introduction of Bible readings in our public schools. Why? The matter cannot be put any more clearly than does The Pilot in the following words:

"But we do object to the reading of the Protestant version of the Bible in the schools which are ours just as much as they are the schools of our Protestant neighbors, not merely because it is a version which we cannot accept, but because, as conducted in the schools, the reading of the Protestant version has always had the character of a religious service, heretical to us, and consequently an exercise against the imposition of which we conscientiously object."

If for Protestant in the foregoing extract we substitute the word Christian, the Jewish position stands forth in all definiteness. We object to the reading of the Bible in the public schools, not so much because it proceeds from a version which, in the case of the Old Testament, we do not care to accept, and, as to the New Testament, which we wholly disregard, as because it has always inevitably taken on the character of a sectarian religious exercise which wounds our susceptibilities and does not for a single moment of time comport with the quite non-sectarian character of our public schools, the palladium of American liberties.

The resolution introduced into the House of Representatives by Congressman J. Hampton Moore, of Pennsylvania, on June 24 with respect to Roumania and her Jews is innocuous enough—from the point of view of those Americans who are ever fearful lest this government become entangled inextricably in foreign problems which have small concern for our people. The resolution calls on the Secretary of State "to inform the House whether any communication has been had with the Roumanian Government or the powers signatory to the treaty of Berlin in relation to the observance of said treaty, or with respect to a naturalization convention between the United States and the Roumanian Government." In the admirable speeches on this occasion by Congressmen Moore and Goldfogle it was pointed out that practically nothing has been done by this country on behalf of the Jews of Roumania since the celebrated note of John Hay in 1902. The matter of the Roumanian treaty has practical importance for us, since Roumanian Jews become citizens of this country by the usual means and thus abjure allegiance to a sovereign who refuses to recognize their previous status as his subjects. If that anomaly exists for the United States, how much greater a difference between precept and example stands before the signatory European governments to the Berlin instrument! They, at the behest of Waddington and Disraeli, and not of Bismarck, as Henry Green would have us believe, declared that religion is not to be a bar to the enjoyment of civil and political rights in Roumania. If here again our government will act wisely and justly a distinct service will be rendered the cause of justice throughout the world.

ENEMIES IN OUR HOUSEHOLD

HENRY GREEN, who did good work of a sort in connection with the Russian passport question, recently returned from a European trip. He frankly admits, as we have had occasion to point out, that this was financed by Nathan Straus, the philanthropist, and in the course of a grandiloquent narrative of his exploits, now running in The American Leader, says:

In Dr. Herzl (sic!) forest I had ten olive trees planted in memory of John Jacob Astor and set up his picture.

What earthly good can Henry Green hope to produce by this action? We recall that the redoubtable Colonel Astor, whose will disposed of an estate worth over $80,000,000, left $30,000 to a private school and a ridiculously small sum to a yachting club! He made no charitable bequests worthy of the name; naturally enough he never thought of any Jewish eleemosynary institution. Yet Mr. Green plants these trees in his honor and sets up his picture. Again we ask, Why?

Colonel Astor was actively identified with the conduct and management of the great Astor estate in this city. We do not know that he ever raised an eyelash for a Jew. This estate, as our readers must well recall, declines to lease certain of its magnificent apartment-house holdings to Jews. Why, then, did Mr. Green go deliberately out of his way to honor John Jacob Astor's memory in a place we Jews regard as peculiarly sacred?

Henry Green is a forceful personality, and it may be that he will accomplish some much-needed good with respect to the Jews of Roumania. On this project he has now embarked and in a manner which comports with our notions of his activity. If the memory of John Jacob Astor will assist the Jews of Roumania in achieving justice for themselves then the "plant" made by Mr. Green may have been worth while.

Henry Green, if he is a loyal Jew, ought to know that in thus countenancing those who have not explicitly or tacitly displayed a positive friendship for the Jewish people he puts all of us on inquiry as to his motives and desires, laudable though these may be.

In short, this question will not down: What reason prompted Henry Green to pay his tribute of trees and a picture in the Herzl forest in Palestine to the memory of John Jacob Astor?

THE RUSSIAN TREATY ONCE MORE

THE press despatches of the last few days disclose the news that negotiations are under way in Washington between the Russian government and our own, the effect of which will be to replace the abrogated treaty of 1832 with a new instrument. Our officials at Washington were at first strangely silent about the matter and suffered the news of it to leak into public print via London. It would appear, however, that Russia made the initial step in the negotiation and that this is taking its course here, in the capital of the United States of America, and not in that of the Czar of all the Russias.

In this situation we must be content with the meagre information vouchsafed to the public at the present time. We must repose confidence in both President Wilson and Secretary of State Bryan, knowing that they fully appreciate the temper and quality of American public opinion on the subject. Both understand that it is the present policy of our government, and it has been such ever since the old treaty of 1832 was abrogated, to insist upon the free entry of American Jews into Russia as an absolute condition precedent to the consummation of a new protocol. Hence we need not give ourselves any concern over the various rumors and reports infiltrating the columns of the general press of the country on this subject. These reports purport to emanate from official sources, but whether they do or do not, until the treaty is proclaimed publicly and definitely none need wage battle on this score with the authorities.

Moreover, the treaty cannot be binding as part of the law of our land until it has been duly ratified by the Senate of the United States. Assuming that, as promulgated by the President, it will be unsatisfactory on the passport question, we shall have ample opportunity to consider it through our duly-constituted representatives in the Senate before it is finally accepted by this government. And, we repeat, we have the utmost confidence in the President and his Secretary of State that the new treaty will be acceptable to the people of the United States.

We agree with The Jewish Ledger that differences in opinion on the subject of religion should never be entertained in a Masonic assembly. We think, however, pace the implied significance of the remarks of our esteemed contemporary, that true Masonry is confined to the three degrees of the blue lodge, or, as they are more usually called, the degrees of symbolic Masonry. Hence we do not share the wonderment of our New Orleans friends at the fact that a rabbi received the degrees in a chapter of Rose Croix Masons at the hands of an Episcopal rector, nor equally that the rev. gentleman in question was free to interpret the lessons of the "work" as it pleased him. To the student of Masonic history the degrees of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, beautiful though they be, breathing the broad spirit of love of our fellow-man though they do, have a distinct significance. Sub specie aeternitatis these may be interpreted only in one way. Symbolic Masonry, on the other hand, some two centuries ago, deliberately forsook its special more or less sectarian appeal and thus, by this tour de force, became the great humanizing influence and power for good it has always been. If rabbis wish to pass through the degrees of the Scottish Rite that is their own business. We, for our part, would have them avoid the telling us or any audience of their impressions.

INCANTATIONS

וילכו וקני מואב וקני מדין וקסמים בידם ויבאו אל-בלעם:
כי לא-נהש ביעקב ולא-קסם בישראל כעת יאמר ליעקב
ולישאל מה-פעל אל:

"And the elders of Moab and of Midian departed with charms in their hand; and they came unto Bileam." (Num. xxii, 7.)

"Surely there is no incantation against Jacob, nor charm against Israel; as at this time, it shall be said of Jacob and of Israel, What hath God wrought." (Num. xxiii, 23.)

THERE never was such a time for the visible workings of Providence as when Israel was being led forth toward the Promised Land. The smithy we call history was kept unusually busy. The spirit of God swelled the bellows and the sparks flew upward. The sledge hammer struck the anvil with resistless, rhythmic blows in which all could hear the song of the new dawn. Moab and Midian heard it. Balak and Bileam heard it. It sang their doom. They planned therefore, to avert the doom. How? By what means did they hope to stay the mighty world-forces thundering in their ears? "With charms in their hand!"

They relied on charms. They believed in magic incantations. Of course, you modern men and women smile in superior fashion. You do not believe that any formula, mumbled mechanically, could influence destiny. But think for a moment! Are you altogether free from this belief in incantations? Are you not, too, slaves of some pet formula? Of some pet fetish? Think how much there is in your days of meaningless, mumbling and idle telling of beads! Are you not convinced, too, that destiny hangs on your lips and your finger tips?

Incantation of the kind that lulls the soul and imparts to men an illusory sense of power, plays an important part in modern life. The list of modern incantations is indeed too long to bear enumeration; here, only a few will be mentioned. In the first place, there is the powerful incantation of ringing coin. Money is the most adored modern fetish. Its magic virtue is never doubted. Never has amulet been esteemed as highly as it. It is believed to avert all evil. It heals all gashes. It compensates all shortcomings. It is the sesame that unlocks all doors. Mighty and invincible is the magician who possesses a great deal of it. To him belong heaven and earth and all that is therein. Let him but take up a few handful of coin and—presto!—neither the small voices of the soul nor the thundering feet of God will be heard above the jingle-jangle of this voiceless incantation.

The next incantation is perhaps more powerful yet. If the former is entirely voiceless, this incantation has but one sound: the "I." How oft is it uttered by the modern man and woman! With what air of infallible efficacy! Of course, it gets a little monotonous, but who has ever minded monotony in incantations? Why, incantations depend for their effect largely on monotony! Thus we draw off the incantation of the Ego morn and night. No sweeter sound than the I. No prouder sound than the I. Nothing that holds greater enchantment than the I. All demons are exorcised, all clouds banished, all judgments indefinitely postponed, for him who stands in the magic circle of the Ego. Do fortes, terrible and ominous, bear down upon us, threatening to destroy? Does it seem that heaven and earth are in league against us? No fear! Even they, we fancy, are readily subdued by this one-sounded incantation.

Lastly, let us mention the incantation of the clamorous catch-word. Truly, this is perhaps the most insidious kind of incantation, for it resembles the character of ancient magic formulae most closely. The magic formulae of ancient times were compounded without reference to the meaning of words; similarly, there is very little, if any, meaning in the babel of popular slogans that are bandied about by Tom, Dick and Harry promiscuously and self-complacently. Catch-words need not be understood; in fact, their sorcery lies in the very fact that they are not understood. Does anybody ever stop to think out for himself the meaning of such words as Progress, Reason, Modern, Democracy, Evolution, etc., etc.? All one needs to do is to repeat them in and out of time and place, and look very wise. Never before perhaps has the incantation of the popular catch-word been as powerful as in our time. Great problems beset us on all sides; there is a stir of restlessness and fatal upheaval everywhere; life is torn into shreds and tatters; difficulties our fathers never dreamed of call for earnest thought and prudent action. But in the midst of all this social turmoil, while the very foundations of life seem to be crumbling away from us, the host of those who rely on this insidious form of incantation is steadily growing. Is there any difference, after all, between Balak and Bileam and the aforesaid Tom, Dick and Harry? These as well as those placed their faith in the virtue of mere words as such. These as well as those were slaves of their particular formula, of their own pet incantations.

Thus, we all come with "charms in our hand." The pathos of it! We stand in the midst of this vast, God-governed universe; mighty forces swirl about us doing their silent work; stupendous miracles take place before our eyes at every moment; and yet, in our conceit, we pit against these our petty manufactured miracles, our pitiful little tricks, our illusory powers, thinking that the universe will heed our bidding at the mere wave of our wand. But Bileam found out at last that his charms and incantations were of no avail to set at naught "What God hath wrought." While God works in the world, none will know the hidings of His power; none will master the world-forces and bend them to his own will. This alone do we know; that the world is ruled by spiritual laws—by Justice, Righteousness, Mercy, Truth! These laws hold stars in their orbits and nations in their places; they are the mainstay of mountains and of men. They sway the tide, they quicken the heart. Place yourself in agreement with these eternal laws, and the world's yours. Violate them, and the sky will frown upon you and the earth refuse to mother you. Would you penetrate into the heart of the world-mystery? This is its heart. Would you solve the problem of life with genuine magic? This is life.

WOLFSON'S IMPERIAL ARVERNE, LONG ISLAND

Beautifully located, close to the ocean, on Gaston avenue. Thoroughly renovated. Reservations may now be made. Open for reception of guests from June 1. Table boarders accommodated.

Our excellence of cuisine is too well known to need further comment, as well as the observance of the Jewish dietary laws in all its details, under the personal care of Mrs. Wolfson and myself. Endorsed by Rabbi M. S. Margolies, of Cong. Kehilath Jeshurun.

Judging from the reports that have come under our eye, Anglo-Jewry is much exercised over the recent conferment of the rabbinical diploma by Dr. Gaster upon a minister subordinate to the lay and ecclesiastical authorities of the United Synagogue. From the English point of view, the position of those who frown upon this proceeding seems to be well taken. If system and orderly procedure count for anything, they must govern persons who sustain a certain relation to a superior officer or body. While it is generally true that every rabbi of qualified rank has the implicit authority to give Semicha, this should be regulated in Western countries in accordance with Occidental standards of to-day. We see this tendency present with us; at its last convention the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of the United States and Canada devoted considerable attention to the problem of the rabbinat in orthodox synagogues. How much more important is this question for orthodox and system-loving Anglo-Jewry!

Nationalists and the Zionists among the students at the famous University of Vienna have latterly resulted in scenes which are truly scandalous and which have literally compelled the academic authorities to intervene. The former party is composed of anti-Semites, while the latter is formed of students who do not fear to proclaim their Jewish affiliations from the housetops. When the adherents of the two camps collided with each other some pretty scenes were to be anticipated and realized. But a mere fracas of students is not very serious, and need not be regarded by the commentator on things Jewish in the world of to-day as provocative of alterations in the current of Jewish history. Now, however, the anti-Semites were flushed with their victory over the Zionists, whom they outnumbered, and "went in" for larger and more influential "prey." Thus they broke up a meeting of an important Austrian sociological body, and as a result were castigated unmercifully in an academic manner by the university authorities. There is none who pities them in their discomfiture, and none who will endeavor to encourage them to repeat their silly offense. On the other hand, the Zionists have not achieved a victory, and probably in future they will find their part at Vienna as thorny as it was heretofore.

The Rev. Professor George Adam Smith, in his Schweich lectures before the British Academy, treated the early poetry of Israel in its physical and social origins. These have just been published, and there we read the following: "Those who among the Hebrews correspond to the Aryan poets call themselves singers, minstrels, shepherds of words, comparers, bewailers and the like—anything but makers. The verbs which describe their functions express not the power of creation, but the capacity for impression; not the art of building or of ornament so much as the process of outpouring and the spirit of urgency. The singers rose from and were inspired by less coherent forms of life than our own, and this social looseness, along with their people's ignorance of architecture and other constructive arts, has had its effect on their poetry." This is a sane and fair estimate of the early Hebrew poetry and shows with abundant clearness why the singers of Israel dealt with the soul, with the relations of man to the Creator of heaven and earth, with high ethical and moral ideals in preference to considering subjects of the earth.

We think that Dr. Hertz, the new chief rabbi of England, was well advised in making an attempt to secure additional rabbinical assessors for the Beth Din of London. Only in this way can the status of the Anglo-Jewish ministry be successfully and permanently raised. The chief rabbi's invitation to Dr. Hermann Gollancz is to be commended from this point of view, and it is to be regretted that the latter saw himself unable to fall in with it. Removed as we are from the actual scene, we, of course, do not know the inwardness—if there be such—of Dr. Gollancz's refusal. All the same, we are certain that Dr. Hertz has done and is doing all he reasonably can to be in truth the real spiritual chief of the Jews in the United Kingdom. To him we say: Hazak!

"THE POLICE."

There has been for many years dissatisfaction with the government of the police force in the City of New York; it has been so under a chief, a bi-partisan board and a commissioner. Every municipal administration has had to contend with the difficulties attendant the police conditions; none has been free from it.

The police force in the City of New York is practically an army corps. The army of the United States is composed of about 70,000 men; the police force of the City of New York consists of 10,000 men, equal to one-seventh part of the United States Army. Who is there that will deny that it is far easier to manage, control and govern the 70,000 men of the army than it is the police force of this city?

With its system of court martials and disciplinary methods, the soldiers constituting the army are kept strictly in line; indeed, there are comparatively few breaches of discipline, and the punishment meted out is generally effective and rarely overruled. Far different from the practice that obtains in the police force, where men of high and low rank, when dismissed, are nine times out of ten reinstated by the courts to their previous rank and are awarded back pay.

Then, again, in the jurisdiction covered by the New York Police Department, there are happenings, criminal in character, every hour in the day, and the duties of the force are quite different from the duties of the army, notably in times of peace, and in every way more difficult.

The history of the police force has shown that there are unworthy men in it. That is nothing new, men who have grown up in the methods that have been so generally condemned by the press for years, and yet compared to the great numerical strength of the body, these so-called grafters are few, and the great body of the police are good men.

Every one of the heads of the police department have tried their best to govern it. None seem to have received the full approbation of the public, and under present methods none, it seems, ever will. The present chief is doing all he can; he has a severe task on his hands, and every observing citizen who will take in the situation will stand by Mayor Gaynor, and approve the stand he takes in standing by and upholding his Police Commissioner. Notwithstanding all the criticism leveled against the Mayor in connection with the police force, his incumbency of the Mayoralty has had a very salutary influence upon the force in many ways, and it may be added, upon the Magistrates' courts as well.

It is mighty easy to criticize and condemn, but more difficult to construct and build up a police force to that degree of perfection which the hypercritical point at

The Fountain of Life

By ARCHIBALD ROSS.

"With Thee is the fountain of life. In Thy light shall we see light." Psalm 36:19.

Behold, fond man, thy wealth!

Not all the Indies' gold

Can once compare with the great fount

So plainly here extolled.

Why hast thou life? 'Tis vain

To say thou ne'er canst tell.

Thy thousand gifts of heart and brain

Can solve the riddle well.

And they are thine, O man!

Gifts Godlike, prescient, grand.

Grace, mercy, genius, will to plan,

And wisdom to command.

Truth for its own sweet sake;

Love for its sacred worth.

These are the honeyed springs that make

The veriest heaven of earth.

See Duty at her post,

To keep the foe at bay.

The armor used in Truth's defence

Is sharpened every day.

These form thy wealth. Who dare

With these say life's a curse?

Thy house, O man, robed in God's wear,

Thy mind a universe.

These thy credentials then,

While men accept or no.

Councils may harass and condemn,

And warrant, waste and woe.

God warrants. Men may wait,

And question of thy skill.

They cannot quarrel with the state

Thy Maker bids thee fill.

The blind, the sick, the dumb,

The hungry wait our call.

Here bud the trophies of our fame,

And triumphs o'er the fall.

Life, to be sweet and true,

To action must be given.

Pure labor finds enjoyment's cup

Well filled with draughts from heaven.

What witnesses abound

To cheer us on the road!

The symphonies of peace and joy

Are everywhere bestowed.

The marvels of the eye,

The secrets of the ear,

Toned for vibration's cunning work

Ere we can see and hear.

The awful vault of heaven,

The infinite of space,

The orchestra of human hearts

That glorifies our race.

The jewels of the home

That are not born to die,

The fragrance mellowing the air

As Summer passes by.

These fitnesses that glow

O'er Life's supreme domain,

Are but embroideries and links

Embellishing her train.

CUISINE STRICTLY KOSHER

A new addition has been built and the dining room greatly enlarged, materially to the comfort of the guests.

The story is told that when M. Poincare, the new President of the French Republic, first entered politics one of his political opponents taunted him with his youthfulness.

"I may be young," M. Poincare replied, "but I promise you that something shall be done every day to wipe out that disadvantage."

The Sayings of the Jewish Fathers.

Pirke Abot.
Joseph I. Gorfinkle, Ph.D.
New York, Bloch Publishing Company, 1913.

Pirke Abot, the six chapters of the Mishna, which deal with ethics and moral philosophy of the Jewish people in ancient times, a rich collection of noble saying, lustrous, clever and scintillating yet none the less truthful and wise, contain, within a very brief and concise compass, the very essence of the Jewish philosophy and its moral outlook upon life, man's duty towards his God and fellow man, speculations upon his destiny, his hopes and fears. When we read these ancient chapters we are eternally surprised at their very modernness, their applicability to present day—hence eternal—problems, their very freshness, the comprehensive depth, penetration and wisdom which animates them, superadded by a rich, direct style—the style of the Mishna—which ever scintillates wisdom and sunshine like a clear-cut gem in perfect setting. A work of rich classic importance should be placed in the hands of all men who are capable of reading and profiting by them, aside from its value as furnishing a guide and index to the system of Jewish social and moral philosophy. Hence the necessity of its translation into the languages which are more accessible to its modern reader than the ancient and dead Hebrew. We do indeed possess a previous translation—or two, to be exact—in English by one Taylor, whose translation is faithful to the text in every detail and is also literary, yet can we not have too many of them, just as there is more than one translation of the Iliad and other classical works of antiquity in the English language. Beside the present translator and editor did not rest content with the mere performance of the translator's task, but had carefully edited the work, adding copious notes, enlightening many an obscure passage by the aid of a ripe scholarship and a painstaking study and the patient sifting of the various extant texts, the writings of many commentators, both Jewish and Gentile, of which there have been so many all through the centuries.

Says the author in his preface to the work: "Notwithstanding the fact that there are many editions of the sayings of the Jewish Fathers, and that it has been translated innumerable times in all modern tongues, no apology need be given for the appearance of this little volume in its series of Jewish classics." The translation in this edition is based largely upon that of Taylor, in his "Sayings of the Jewish Fathers," and upon the excellent version of Singer in his "Authorized Daily Prayer Book." And also that "this edition is intended mainly for popular reading, but it has been thought wise to amplify the notes, especially with bibliographical references, so that it may serve the purpose of a teacher's handbook, and also be useful as a text book for the higher grades of religious schools and for study circles." The notes are by no means intended to be exhaustive, but rather to be suggestive, which they certainly are in a great measure. "It is the humble hope of its editor"—here we quote from the introduction once more—"that this little book may be the means of further popularizing the practical and, at the same time, high-minded wisdom of the Fathers; that it may serve as an incentive to a more detailed study of their philosophy of life, and that its appearance may help to lead in a revival of that most ancient and praiseworthy custom of reading the Pirke Abot in the house of worship on the Sabbath during the summer months." He who would be saintly must fulfill the dicta of the Fathers. There is no doubt that the editor has produced a very valuable little work small in compass of space, but large indeed in point of importance, viewed from whichever standpoint it may be, and worthy of being termed "a Jewish classic." The train and boat service to this City by the sea is the best of any shore resort; the Pennsylvania and Jersey Central will have a hundred trains per day during the season. The rate for season tickets is only 72c. per day. The Atlantic Highlands boat and good train connections make every day a pleasure trip to attend business and have a home in the Summer Resort City.

The CHAMBER OF COMMERCE will furnish all requests regarding hotels, cottages, or information in general.

BROOKLYN NOTES.

Young Men's Hebrew Association. The reduction in the admission fees has proven very popular and the number of new members has broken all records. It has been decided to maintain this reduction for an indefinite period. The plans for the opening of the fall season are now assuming definite shape and everything seems to point to one of the most active and successful seasons in the history of the fast growing and progressive association. One thing which is bound to attract wide attention is the civic forum, to which Superintendent Eisenberg is devoting a great deal of his time and energies. The first public meeting will be held on Sunday, September 21. Another feature which is attracting wide attention is a course in practical public speaking, which is to be given by Superintendent Eisenberg himself. This course is for the special benefit of lawyers, business men and growing young men of the association. Already over twenty have made application to take this course. It will be limited to thirty, owing to the lack of better facilities. Temple Beth Emeth, Flatbush. Temple Beth Emeth of Flatbush will lay the cornerstone of its building on the afternoon of Sunday, July 20. A programme for the occasion is being prepared and many notable speakers will be present at the exercises. The building is being erected rapidly and will be ready for occupancy on September 30. The Sisterhood of the Temple held a theatre party at the New Brighton Casino, Brighton Beach, on Monday evening, July 7. The proceeds will be turned into the building fund of the Temple. A monster ball is being arranged for the eve of Thanksgiving Day. Masonic Hall has been engaged for the purpose. The committee on the laying of the cornerstone consists of Maurice P. Davidson, chairman; William Goldschmidt, Meyer Yondorf, William Catlin, J. J. Kramer and A. M. Phillips. Samuel J. Levinson, the rabbi of the congregation, is secretary to the committee. Congregation Sons of Israel, Bath Beach. The closing exercises of the Hebrew and Religious School of the congregation took place on Sunday, July 6. There was a large attendance present and there were many words of praise expressed for the proficiency shown by the scholars. The school is composed of seven classes and has an enrollment of 140 pupils. The teachers are M. L. Jacobs, Dr. A. Braverman, L. Flax and M. Flax. Rev. Henry S. Morais is the superintendent. Federation of Jewish Charities' Endless Chain. The most encouraging responses are being daily received by the Brooklyn Federation of Jewish Charities in answer to their endless chain appeal. Thirty thousand dollars must still be raised to earn Julius Rosenwald's generous offer of $25,000. The endless chain is making a non-sectarian appeal to the residents of the Greater City who are not already subscribers to the federation to give one dollar toward the maintenance of the many non-sectarian institutions that the federation has under its care. Goodman have returned from their wedding trip and are now summering at the Hotel Rudolph, Arverne, L. I. Rabbi and Mrs. Israel Herbert Levinthal and daughter, of Brooklyn, are now at Atlantic City, N. J., where they will remain for the summer.

SOCIAL.

Mrs. J. Isaacs, of No. 2332 Seventh avenue, recently entertained at her home Mrs. Fanny Oppenheimer, of Houston, Texas. Mrs. Oppenheimer, who was born in New York City, has not been here for over forty years, and one of the pleasant features of her visit was a reunion of a number of her school chums, who attended the Elm street school over forty years ago. Those who were present are now nearly all grandmothers, and it is needless to state that they had many things to talk over after forty years' separation. They were (their maiden names are given): Pauline Morris, Mary Jacobs, Eva Goldstein, Hannah Green, Rachel Barnett, Sarah Levy, Mima Simons, Sarah Marxs, Henrietta Levy, Caroline Green, Cella Levy and Minnie Harris. Mrs. Oppenheimer, who was accompanied by her daughter, left for her home last Tuesday, carrying with her many pleasant recollections of her visit. The Misses Harriet B. and Carolyne A. Cohn, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Edward R. Cohn, gave an informal Fourth of July dance at their summer home, Bath avenue, Long Branch, N. J. A great many of their friends from New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore attended and a very enjoyable evening was spent. Mr. and Mrs. Cohn are entertaining the Hon. H. C. Garthe, Mrs. Garthe, H. Garthe, Jr., of Baltimore, Md., and Mr. Harry J. Silberstein, of New York. The first break in the original cast of "Peg o' My Heart" at the Cort Theatre occurred last Tuesday night when Michael was forced through illness to the hospital, and his part was taken by his understudy, Michael, having played his important part at the Cort through 223 consecutive performances, refusing at all times to relinquish to the anxiously awaiting understudy his part even though attacked by a majority of canine diseases, was tenderly carried away by Miss Taylor to the tune of many yelps to a place where medical

CORRESPONDENCE.

A Missionary Rebuked. Editor HEBREW STANDARD: Enclosed copy of letter speaks for itself and I send it to you with the idea that it may be of interest. No doubt many of your readers know to whom it refers and may be able to affirm that I have been in no wise too harsh with him. Yours obediently, ISAAC POLACK. New York, July 9, 1913.

Mrs. or Miss Clara A. Churchill, Attleboro, Mass.: Dear Madam.—Your letter of June 28 to my wife came to hand a few days ago, and in her absence I write to acknowledge your doubtless well-meant solicitude for her soul. There also arrived some literature from a man styling himself "Ex-Rabbi," and this was promptly put where it belonged after sufficient perusal to show that it contained stock phrases usual in efforts of that kind. You evidently do not know that to earnest Jews their religion is their very life. If they are well grounded in the tenets of their faith they are too sure of it to be moved, or even swayed by arguments on behalf of what is to them an alien and man-made religion. Especially would Jews reject any advances made in that direction by persons of their own race; on the contrary, such persons do not receive credit for being sincere and there are records enough to indicate that other motives are at work than the desire to save souls. It would be difficult to find in the entire history of the Christian era any genuine, sincere cases of conversion from Judaism to Christianity, unclouded by inducement of one kind or another. Firm as Jews are in holding on to Judaism, they by no means deny that Heaven is open to others. It is a well-known rabbinical adage that "the pious of all nations have a share in the world to come." Yet, I suppose, so long as there are people who believe that the only road to Heaven runs along their street, and who by contributions and legacies keep alive the movement for the conversion of Jews to Christianity, so long there will be people anxious to earn the money thus provided. Yours sincerely, ISAAC POLACK.

away, New York, early on Tuesday morning at the age of eighty-six. Mr. Hamburger was the oldest member of the order in point of service and had served the United States Grand Lodge as Grand Master during the years 1853-54, 1856-58 and 1875-92, when he was succeeded by Julius Harburger. He was Grand Master of District No. 1 during the term of 1874-75. Mr. Hamburger in later years had retained his active interest in the order and at the last convention of District Grand Lodge No. 1, held in February of this year, he was present and delivered an address. The funeral services took place yesterday (Thursday) at Union Fields Cemetery and were largely attended. There were special Masonic services under the auspices of King Solomon's Lodge, No. 271, of which Mr. Hamburger was the oldest living past master, having served in the years 1881-82. He joined the lodge over forty-six years ago.

CHILDREN'S PAGE

Rabbi Channia Ben Dosa

Dear Children:—

Now that you know something of the marvelous life of Rabbi Channia Ben Dosa, I will tell you his three maxims. His first maxim is this:

"He in whom the fear of his sin takes precedence over his wisdom, his wisdom is enduring, but he whose wisdom takes precedence over the fear of his sin, his wisdom is not enduring."

This maxim, dear children, teaches us that every person has "his sin" and "his wisdom" which are peculiarly his own, and are as different from the sin and wisdom of the rest of his fellow creatures as his appearance is different from theirs—it further teaches us that it is our duty from our earliest childhood to fear our sin and cultivate our wisdom or talents in which we naturally excel, but before we even make an attempt to cultivate our talents we must fear our sin and try to eradicate it from our nature, if we will do so, our wisdom will endure, as our very sin will be transformed into wisdom or virtue, however, if we only seek to cultivate the beautiful flowers of our talents and neglect to weed out from the garden of our character the thorns and thistles of our sin the beautiful flowers cannot endure.

Let us illustrate this by the very life of the great Rabbi Channia Ben Dosa.

What was the "sin" of Rabbi Channia Ben Dosa? Poverty!

"Poverty!" you will exclaim. "Is poverty a sin?" No, dear children, poverty is no sin, but poverty leads to discontent and discontent is a sin.

What was the "wisdom" of Rabbi Channia Ben Dosa?

Prayed! It was his peculiar wisdom or talent so to pray that his prayer would go straight up to the great Throne of Mercy without any hindrance, and it would reach the great Heavenly Father whose love for "Channia, my son," caused him to grant his prayer whenever it was only possible to do so.

Now Rabbi Channia was well aware of the dangers of poverty and his fear of the sin it may lead to, which is discontent, caused him to content himself with a measure of carols from Sabbath eve to Sabbath eve.

His wife was a true helpmate to him, sharing with contentment the wretched poverty which was their portion in this life, and delighting in the spiritual joy which was in store for them in the world where poverty is not known, but there is a limit to suffering, the poor woman was not ashamed of her poverty, as that was the act of an inscrutable Providence to whose will we must be resigned, but when Sabbath eve came and there was nothing in the house wherewith to honor the Queen, it broke her heart with shame lest it be known to the neighbors, for as we can readily understand, theirs was the poverty that would not accept charity as long as there was a possibility of keeping body and soul together, and here was a wretched neighbor who was mean enough to seek to wound her sensitive nature where it hurt the most, and a miracle had to be performed by Him who loved "Channia, my son," to save his wife from what was worse to her than death. She could not bear it any longer. "How long yet shall we suffer from this grinding poverty?" she said to her husband. There was the note of discontent. "What shall I do?" cried he, for surely he did everything that an honest man could do to better his circumstances, but it was all of no avail, for it was destined that he should be poor, and poor he must be to the end. "Pray," cried she, for well she knew his great power, "pray that something be given you." She feared to express her meaning fully, but he understood, and he showed her in a vision of a broken table that few indeed are they who can enjoy the blessings of two tables—the table of prosperity in this life and the table of reward in the future life, and when he convinced her that such was the case, she herself urged him to pray that there be no shame for them in the world of truth, and that she would even content herself to suffer all the shame of poverty in this world of falsehood.

Thus the fear of his sin took precedence over his wisdom, and the "sin" itself, his poverty, was turned into wisdom, his talent or virtue, for much as he helped the world with his prayer he helped it still more with his poverty, for "all the world is sustained for the sake of Channia, my son, and Channia, my son, contents himself with a measure of carols from Sabbath eve to Sabbath eve."

Mamma—I'm afraid that young Wilder will not make you a good husband, Clara. Clara—Why not, mamma? Mamma—Because it seems to me that he rather neglects his personal appearance. Clara—Yes, that's true, mamma, and I'm glad you mentioned it. I'll see that he makes his personal appearance here every evening after this instead of only twice a week.

Young Reporter—These new colleges of journalism will turn out a great number of journalists, don't you think?

Old Reporter—Sure thing!

Young Reporter—Some competition in the game, eh?

Old Reporter—Oh, I guess not.

Young Reporter—Why?

Old Reporter—Well, we shall be just as shy of newspaper men as ever.—Judge.

"You look annoyed. What's the matter?"

"Bertha told me a secret the other day, and I can't tell you what it is?"

"Why not?"

"I've forgotten it."

"It's useless to urge me to marry you. When I say no I mean no."

"Always?"

"Invariably."

"And can nothing ever break your determination when once you make up your mind?"

"Absolutely nothing."

"Well, I wouldn't care to marry a girl like that, anyhow."—Boston Transcript.

Barber—Hair cut? Yes, sir. Take this chair, sir.

Customer—Thanks. I suppose I needn't take my collar off.

Barber—Oh, no, sir. Keep your hat on if you like, sir.

"Have you ever been married before?" asked the license clerk.

"Great heavens, young man!" exclaimed the experienced prima donna. "Don't you read the papers?"

Whereupon she wired immediate instructions to discharge her press agent.—Washington Star.

CONUNDRUMS.

What is that which a young lady looks for but does not wish to find? A hole in her stocking.

Why is a steam engine at a fire an anomaly? Because it works and plays at the same time.

What is the difference between forums and ceremonies? You sit upon one and stand on the other.

What word contains the five vowels in order? Facetious.

Why is the luckiest of the vowels? Because it is the centre of bliss, while the others are in purgatory.

Why are birds so melancholy in the morning? Because their little bills are all over due.

What is a button? A small event that is always coming off.

Why is a shoeblack like an editor? Because he polishes the understanding of his patrons.

Why are potatoes and corn like certain sinners of old? Because "having eyes they see not, and having ears they hear not."
