"On the Fringe of the World"

By HANNAH BERMAN

Sonya was the prettiest girl in the village—by far the prettiest. And she knew it. She wore the smartest frocks, and the largest sized corals of any girl in the district. And Sonya had lovers by the score. And, as her father was a man of prosperity, she led a fine life, and did exactly as she liked. All day long her cheeks glowed and her eyes sparkled with the sheer joy of living. Her red lips were forever parted in a distracting smile.

Among those who worshipped her from afar off, scarcely daring to lift up his eyes to her, was the little Yeshiva student, Berrel, a youth of eighteen or nineteen, whose studious habits had gained for him a wide reputation even among scholars. He was miserably poor, and felt bowed to the earth with the hopelessness of his love for Sonya. It was absurd—his falling in love with this beautiful creature whose most trivial wish there were dozens of young men ready to carry out. He knew that, and he repeated the truth to himself over and over again. But he only loved her all the more because she was so far off from him, like a star in the sky. The few occasions on which he had found himself close to her were to him like dreams of Paradise. He cherished the memory of them as a miser cherishes his treasure.

Berrel made up his mind that he must go to America, make a lot of money, and marry Sonya. He had several sleepless nights before he was quite decided. The idea was such a good one that he trembled at the very goodness of it. As he was not yet twenty, and Sonya only about seventeen, he calculated that everything would be all right if he returned in two or three years at the outside, with a few hundred roubles to set him up in business in the village. He had heard of men making huge sums of money in a few years, and why should he not succeed in making a moderate sum? There was no reason to think that his plans would fail. On the contrary, high hopes. He tasted of happiness in anticipating it.

easy to make even a moderate fortune, but it was extremely difficult some time, as a shirt packer in a New York factory. That was what his dreams had turned to.

Though his hopes were dampened and his future looked gloomy, he remembered Sonya and he was happy. She was like a shining star to him. She seemed to hover near him, and to lighten his way, so that his courage still remained undaunted, in spite of the labor and the lowliness of his task. And in spite, too, of the fact that he had not a single cent saved up towards the fortune he promised himself to come home with.

As time wore on his fortune changed. He began to prosper. He began to pile on the silver coins, week after week, until he found himself a man of means. But the time was not yet ripe when he might return home. It was slow work making the large sum of money he would need before he could set up the grand house he dreamt of for Sonya. And he went about his work with a will. His passion for Sonya increasing as his little fortune increased. He longed to see her again, if only for a single hour. She was a vision of bliss to him, even in his darkest hours of failure. When he succeeded she was a veritable goddess of blight and joy to him.

The wish to go back to his native village took a stronger hold of him day by day. And he hoarded up every cent with the niggardliness of a miser in order that the hour might come all the quicker when he would be in a position to ask Sonya to marry him. Then, too, he was consumed by the dread thought that she might have married some one else in his absence. This fear became so unbearable that, after much inward debating, he wrote her a long letter, telling her of his secret love for her, and of his wish to go back home and marry her, if she would have him. What was his surprise and astonishment to receive from her a long, rambling reply telling him that she had loved him always, and was overjoyed with his proposal. She was now looking forward eagerly to his home-coming.

Berrel was in the seventh heaven of joy. He would not wait another day, but would make his preparations immediately. However, he could not possibly get away before he had made all arrangements with his partner. And this took him several weeks, which seemed to him as long as years.

ERNST VON POSSART

A few weeks ago the veteran actor bade farewell to the German stage, of which he had been an ornament for fifty years. Born in Breslau, seventy-one years ago, Herr von Possart has been a "Mundiner" for nearly half a century. First as character actor then as regisseur and finally as intendant (general manager) of the Court Theatres, he has in each capacity shown talent—genius would, perhaps, be the better word—of the highest order. The impress of his broad culture has not only been felt in the direction of the drama, but the opera has also benefited greatly thereby, for the model Mozart performances for which Munich is famous, owe their origin to him. His farewell role was "Rabbi Sichel," and he imparted to it the same genial humor and the same engaging racial traits which characterized it when I first saw it at the Thalia Theatre, New York, in 1885.

It seemed to him as he stood on the deck of the ocean liner, looking down into the swell of the waters, that the years had not gone by at all, but that he was still a young man going forth in search of his fortune. Only that he was now flushed with victory, where, on his first crossing, he had nothing more tangible than hopes to rest on. The best part of his life was yet before him. All his trials and sufferings were blotted out as completely as writing is wiped out from the sand by the intruding tide. He looked forward to spending the rest of his days in the peace and quiet and comfort of his tiny village. Sonya by his side, turning over the earth, weeding and hoeing and reaping and cutting down the timber in the forest. Anything was better than a life of noise and bustle. But particularly was that mode of life best which brought him back to the happiness he had yearned for for years. And, surely, if Sonya loved him, all things were well with him forever.

The hours he spent in the stuffy train traveling from the port to the inland village were interminably long to him. He tried to picture how much and after what manner Sonya must have changed in the interval of the twenty years he had been away. His speculations only served to agitate him.

The village was altogether changed to him. He rubbed his eyes. Could this tiny bridge—this miserable collection of rotten planks be the fine bridge upon which he as a boy had looked with pride? Could this group of hovels be the charming village to which he had passionately longed to return? Surely there must be some mistake somewhere. Surely it was not possible that, in his dreams, he had glorified everything beyond recognition? And, yet, so it was. It was undoubtedly his own village.

It took him no more than a few short seconds to realize that he had come back from the great whirling world of New York to a miserable hole that represented neither adequate life nor decent death—where nothing was really and truly alive.

The village was to him now like a stagnant pool. And worst of all, it was on the very fringe of the world. It was practically cut off from all communication.

And so his brother Yankel was considered a man of substance. That was to him a marvelous discovery, seeing that the same wealthy Yankel lived in a miserable hovel, and bought and sold his merchandise in single kopeks worth at a time. Berrel could hardly manage to breathe in the stuffy log-ceiled living room with its tiny dormer window and huge overheated stove. And as his eye fell on the smoke-laden beams and rafters that supported the roof, it seemed to him that the only purpose they served was that of holding a rope by which a man might hang himself easily. But the morbid feeling was only transitory. He was buoyed up with the hopes that his meeting with Sonya would compensate him amply for everything. She was now, more than ever before, his light and his guiding star.

He dressed himself with scrupulous care next morning before setting out for Sonya's cottage, at the far end of the village. He wondered why she lived there. She must have built herself a house, for there were only a few half-tumbled down peasants' huts there in his day.

As he drew nearer to the spot which had been indicated to him his heart misgave him, for there was no house standing above the rest. All the cottages were as like as peas in a pod. And so Sonya lived in a peasant's hut, the rent of which was no more than a few kopeks a week—the proud Sonya for whom the best silks in the market town had never been good enough.

He knocked timidly at her door, and there came out to open for him, a stout woman with a heavy flabby face, light brown wig, frightened eyes, and slatternly dress. He recognized her at once, despite of the great change which had taken place in her. His sweetest dreams were as dust and ashes. He felt that his life was being hemmed in by indefinable tragic tragedies. But he had no time to think for himself. In a fretful voice, Sonya said to him: "Nu! why don't you come in? Why do you stand outside the door like a stranger?" When he had crossed the threshold she added: "But, Berrel, you have not come by yourself, have you?"

Berrel's eyes were wider open than ever. "Why not? What do you mean?"

She simpered back in a drawing, affected voice:

"Oh, nothing, Berrel; only when one is alone. A widow, you know, has to be even more careful than a maid these days. Every one knows you are coming home—eh, for me. But, you know, it must be done decorously. Not that I attach any importance to the idle gossip of the villagers. But, for the sake of the little ones, I cannot be too careful. I suppose it is different in America. Every one can do as he likes there. It's different again here. For instance, when my poor husband—peace be unto him!—when he died the villagers said it was of grief because he had been reduced from his fine position of timber merchant to working for another man, and even digging ditches when he could get nothing better to do. But, believe me, Berrel, it was nothing like that at all which laid my Solomon in the grave. He had had an incurable disease from birth almost—pains in the side, you know, and other pains elsewhere. And, oh, what he suffered! It was the digging that made him worse; and that was why he went to his grave at the early age of thirty-one. Just fancy to yourself what it meant to me to find myself a widow with four tiny infants, one still at the breast! If I were to talk to you for a month, Berrel, I could not describe to you what I felt and what I went through."

She was overcome with the remembrance of her sorrows, and was wiping her streaming eyes with the corner of her apron, Berrel staring at her as if she were a wild animal for whom he had suddenly conceived the most profound contempt, such as one feels at sight of what is hideously ugly. He was as one stricken dumb. He could not utter a sound, much less sympathize with her. He could hardly manage to restrain himself from bursting out into a loud, ironic laugh. He made as if to leave the house, but Sonya noticed the movement. She quickly dried her tears, and said:

"Ah, well, now that you are in my house, Berrel, it won't matter very much if you do stay a while I will send my Benjamin to fetch your brother and sister-in-law, so that everything should be carried out in accordance with the customs of the village, as my poor mother would have had me carry them out if she were alive—may she rest in peace! She was very particular about everything when I was betrothed to poor Solomon. She insisted on carrying everything out to the letter, and for her precision the people held her in high esteem; though, to be sure, I could not appreciate her at the time, being too young to understand anything but wearing nice dresses and corals, long chains, far longer than the other girls wore. Ah, what times those were!"

Berrel was like a man stricken by lightning in his prime. He was rooted to the spot. He felt that he must hear out every single word that she had to say, though it took her hours and hours to make an end. "And afterward?" he asked himself, hoarsely, his tongue cleaving to the roof of his mouth. "Oh, afterward, afterward, afterward!" he kept repeating. But he knew there was no answer to the question, for he had come home especially to marry the beautiful Sonya of his ecstatic visions—the same Sonya who was now chattering as if she had been born an idiotic old woman; whose eyes were blinded to everything but the tiny confines of the tiniest and most desolate village in the world. He cared nothing for the fact that she was not even looking at him. His love for her had turned in a single instant to hatred and contempt, not only for her but for himself as well. Yes; he ought to have remembered that this little Ghetto village of the Russian Pale was on the very confines of the earth; so to speak, and that no one could spend a lifetime in it without becoming petrified. But two things burned into his memory, nay, his very heart and soul, as he stood on the threshold: He had come back expressly to marry this woman, and she regarded herself as his affianced wife. The other thing was the blackened beam out of which a man might hang a rope with ease. The proximity of these two facts moved him to laughter. He could not restrain the impulse, and the little house rang with his shrill, mirthless, sardonic guffaws. He laughed loudly and at great length. When the impulse died away he turned to go—where? That was of no consequence, so long as he escaped.

"You will bring your brother and his wife, Berrel?" Sonya asked.

"Oh, yes, yes, yes!" he replied. "Yes, yes, yes!" And he was gone.

Is Everything Good as It Comes From the Hand of Nature?

B. H.

Once again I stumbled across my scientifically inclined friend.

"Rousseau has good ideas, but there's many a fallacy to be met with in these books of his. For example, look at the way he starts out here: "Everything is good as it comes from nature," and then he goes on to say that it becomes bad when in contact with man. It is said that the sentence revolutionized educational thought. Whereas formerly the view taken was to regard each child possessed of a sort of "devil," the function of education being to drive out the "devil," now it was loudly declared that the child was a perfect little creature, and it only became imperfect when it came in contact with the so-called forces of civilization.

"There is more truth in this view than you can see. Out of it arose the stimulation of interest, and while this came to be carried to extremes, yet its beneficent influence cannot be denied. To-day, as a result of further experience, interest and effort have been judiciously mixed."

"That may be all very true, but I still take exception to Rousseau's statement that "everything is good as it comes from nature." There are many excuses for his ignorance, but there are no excuses for applauding this ignorance now. He lived at a time when such an utterance could only be regarded as revolutionary, but in the light of our present knowledge it is a perversion of the truth." "How so?"

"Simply in this: By a process of evolution we have developed from the mere brute to a highly civilized being. Can you say that nature has placed us into the world perfect in all things? We were monkeys before we were men, and lower forms of life before we assumed the monkey stage, and lifeless inanimate matter before we were transformed into protoplasm. God may have put you into the world on a speck of dust, but by an exceedingly slow and painful process you have developed into the reasonable creature that I see standing before me. Was the speck of dust more perfect than you are now? Is the ape from which you are directly descended superior to you?"

"You naturalists have been the source of no little mischief. Your ingenious Darwin has advanced many startling suggestions, and these have been so often repeated that they now pass for established truths. Remember that your ape-man relation has still not been proven."

"Therein you are very much mistaken. Day by day facts accumulate which tend to strengthen Darwin's view, but not a single fact has been shown which disproves it. Let me tell you of one or two things that we have learnt since Darwin's day. As a result of careful microscopical study it has been ascertained that the closest resemblance exists between the embryo of the anthropoid ape and the human embryo. A still more important analogy has been shown to exist by the close resemblance of the blood of human beings to that of manlike apes. Above all, certain diseases which were thought to be peculiar to human beings alone have been shown to be quite common among apes."

"This is suggestive but by no means conclusive. In the history of science we have often found many plausible analogies to exist, though there was little or nothing in common."

"But these conclusions are drawn from experimental work, not from speculation."

"Your experimental work is little more trustworthy than the pure speculation of the philosopher. What to-day seems to be an established fact as a result of experimental research turns out to be wholly fallacious tomorrow. Modern science itself has had too short a span of life, and we cannot as yet speak of it as having withstood the test of time. Alchemy appears no more ridiculous to us than the science of to-day will appear to future generations."

"Now you talk with little reason. The study of phenomena has been so wonderfully systematized that to compare it for one minute with the haphazard work of the alchemist is ludicrous. Many details may require alterations, but the grand fundamentals have a foundation that will prove as lasting as the heavens above and the earth beneath. "The laws of nature are the thoughts of God," and the grand fundamentals are the laws of nature. But to return to our analogies of man and ape. You may know that the intestines are divided into two parts, the small and the large. In these the final digestion of food products takes place. A close examination of the action of the intestines has shown that whereas the small one is exceedingly active in digestion, the large is well nigh useless. How comes the latter to be in the system at all? Why, it is merely the remains of bygone days. In the ape both the small and the large intestines are necessary. We have outgrown the ape-like condition, but our intestines have not. And what is the result? Unnecessary suffering and shortage of life. Instead of getting rid of the undigestible matter at the end of the small intestine, it continues to go through the long, winding route of the large one, and here all sorts of troubles arise. Yes, we pay a heavy penalty for our animal origin. But for that our lives might extend much longer with far less suffering. The biologist speaks of death as the penalty for having a body. This is quite true if rightly understood. In the case of the protozoa, for example, there is no distinction between the germ plasma and the body; a protozoon reaches its limit of growth and then divides to form two new individuals. Here no death occurs. From this point of view the function of man is to assure reproduction; once this is accomplished he may die in peace. Here the drone sets a classic example. This talk has arisen because of the exception I have taken to Rousseau's statement that everything is good as it comes from the hands of nature." Germs of goodness may be there in the beginning; evolution alone develops them.

THE SUBSTANCE OF FAITH

Sir Oliver Lodge, the well-known scientist and principal of Birmingham University, published a catechism some time ago in which he sought to harmonize religious and scientific truth. The author's object is quite clear. It is to draw up a statement of creed that shall be acceptable to believers and not inconsistent with modern knowledge. He has no "new theology" to offer; he only pretends to express, in new form, the old substance of faith. It need not be supposed that this catechism will be imposed, voluntarily or involuntarily, upon the memories of many children, but it is one which every teacher of children ought to study with care, and which every grown person who thinks on these things might ponder with great profit. So far as can be seen, it need upset no one's belief, but it may throw much new light upon those beliefs, and thousands of people, who are not themselves biologists or chemists, but who have the utmost respect for science, will welcome an exceedingly careful presentation of a distinguished scientist's honest answers to hard questions on the old problems which man has been propounding to himself from the very dawn of knowledge.

"What are you?" asks the new catechist, and the answer comes, "I am a being alive and conscious upon this earth; a descendant of ancestors who rose by gradual processes from lower forms of animal life, and with struggle and suffering became man." The gradual ascent of man is here chiefly insisted upon, but Sir Oliver insists on the importance of explaining to children that there are degraded as well as elevated branches of families which trace their descent from the same parent stock—the differences between them being so marked that the relationship is hard to believe. Letters received at Constantinople from Yemen depict in dark color the situation of the Jews in that province. The Arab population is intensely hostile to them, and the Cadi, who threatens them with wholesale expulsion, only re-nounced his intention on condition that he should impose on them new and heavy taxes. Owing to fresh troubles that have broken out in the region the Government finds it impossible to enforce obedience from the Cadi, and, consequently, to protect the Jews.

A new branch of the Anglo-Palestine Company has been opened at Tiberias. This is the seventh branch of the Zionist Bank in Palestine. The Emir Schahib Arselan, who is one of the most eminent Arabic authors of the day, was formerly one of the bitterest opponents of the Jewish colonization of Palestine, concerning which he had hitherto derived his information from the hostile Syrian press. This declaration has evoked a violent attack from the Haifa paper "Karmel."

The anti-Jewish boycott in Poland is still on the increase, and the economic position of the Jews is daily growing worse. In a report on the trade of the consular district of Jerusalem for 1912, the British Consul, Mr. P. J. C. McGregor, mentions that in Jerusalem, since the extension of compulsory military service to non-Moslems, there had been a marked tendency to emigration among the more intelligent and educated Jews and Christians, a tendency which was further accentuated by the abuses of the tax collector. Owing to the war and the consequent falling off in the pilgrim and tourist traffic on which Jerusalem mainly subsists, business was unusually slack and great distress prevailed. This was aggravated for some time by a financial crisis brought about by a glut of small coin imported by native speculators from Tripoli and Macedonia. The enormous increase in the cost of living was also maintained. Lights had been put up in many of the principal streets of Jerusalem as well as in the Temple area, and as far as limited resources permitted praiseworthy efforts had been made by the municipality to improve the condition of the public thoroughfares.

Littman Charges Sustained.

The charge made by Samuel Littman, ex-sergeant in the Forty-seventh Regiment of Brooklyn, that he was barred from promotion to the rank of Second Lieutenant because he is a Jew, is sustained in the report of Lieut.-Col. Herman Bendell, of Albany, a retired member of the National Guard. The report was approved by Governor Sulzer, who instructed Adj.-Gen. Hamilton to carry out the suggestions contained in it to the effect that Col. Henry C. Barthman be censured for his part in the matter, that Littman be allowed to re-enlist within a period of thirty days, that an election for Second Lieutenant for Company B be ordered soon thereafter, and that upon proof of continued race or religious discrimination the company be disbanded. The report of Lieut.-Col. Bendell says:

"I find by the evidence of the case before me that the determining factors which led to Col. Barthman's conclusion concerning ex-Sergeant Littman's candidacy were not as stated in his communication to the Adjutant-General on February 28, 1913, but the fear that 'things might not be pleasant' for a Jew in the council of officers was the cause of his opposition.

"In view of the fact that the Commander in Chief has ordered me to append with the facts in this case my recommendations, I respectfully recommend that for the injection of the question of race or religion in matters of the National Guard, for making it evident to a number of enlisted men that all efforts on their part to attain to the grade of commissioned officer would be of no avail because of their religious faith, thus stifling ardor and killing ambition, Col. Barthman should be censured and otherwise dealt with as his offense in the judgment of the Commander in Chief may warrant.

"Permission should be given to ex-Sergeant Littman, if he desires to do so, to re-enlist within a period of thirty days; that in due time after his re-enlistment, an election for the choice of second lieutenant in Company B of the Forty-seventh Regiment of the Second Brigade, N. G., N. Y., be ordered. Should any evidence of race or religious discrimination be manifested at such election, the status and discipline of the Guard will be served by disbanding Company B of the Forty-seventh Regiment.

"The inquiry brought to light a condition in Company B and in the Forty-seventh Regiment as a whole which, in my judgment, would justify an investigation with a view to making radical changes.

OBITUARY.

MOSES.—On Wednesday, July 9, the earthly remains of Marks Moses, born American and Jewish to the core, were borne from his late residence, 8 East 127th street, and laid at rest.

"Born American and Jewish to the core," one of the brightest laurels in the wreath of orthodox Judaism in this country, beloved as an American and venerated as a Jew, the staunch and uncompromising upholder of the Jewish Sabbath, at last has gone to his Sabbath rest.

Born in Georgetown, S. C., 52 years ago in a community entirely Christian, his father's store was the only one reminding the Gentiles of the Jewish Sabbath by being strictly closed on that day, and when at the death of his father the store passed in his hands, the same strict observance of the Sabbath was maintained, and when from that little store there developed a large and ever-increasing business, and the name of Marks Moses was not only a power in the city of Georgetown, but well known and highly respected throughout the Southern States, his uncompromising observance of the Jewish Sabbath regardless of any pecuniary considerations was the wonder and admiration of Jew and Gentile alike.

In 1886 he found his helpmate, a girl after his own heart, in the person of Belle Garfunkel, daughter of Mr. Moses Garfunkel and granddaughter of the late centenarian, Rev. A. Trager. He heard of that honorable orthodox family in Columbia, S. C., and wooed and won his bride who was then studying in the College of Columbia, and owing to his fine manly character and true Jewish spirit obtained the hearty consent of her parents. He is mourned by his widow and nine children.

The following instance is a striking example of his love for the Sabbath. One Friday night, as he and his family sat down to enjoy of the Sabbath repast, a fire broke out in his large turpentine distillery, and, despite the fact that it was entirely uninsured and would prove a total loss, he made no effort himself to save anything from that fire, nor would he allow any one else to save anything; firmly resolved to allow no desecration of the Sabbath to take place be the loss what it may. It burned down to the ground as he and his family enjoyed their Sabbath meal with unruffled equanimity.

At the time, when, as acting Mayor of Georgetown, it became his duty to act as the host in a banquet tendered to President Cleveland, who just then visited the city, he did not partake of the banquet, and when asked his reason for abstaining therefrom he said "his observance" of the Jewish dietary laws made it impossible for him to partake thereof.

It was this evidence of his Jewish sincerity and his scrupulously honest and straightforward business methods that won the hearts of all his townsmen, Gentle as well as Jew, and when he left them for New York, about ten years ago for the purpose of giving his children a better education, all wept as being deprived of their most cherished friend and the pride of their community.

No one in Georgetown or in this city, where he established himself in the rice and turpentine business at 116 Wall street, ever knew him to make a statement that was not absolutely true. In his strict and upright moral ideas he could not permit himself to tell a business lie, no matter how much profit it would yield. But stern and severe as he was in his strict integrity, he was the soul of tenderness to his family, for he had scarcely reached his majority when his father died, and, deprived of his parents—for he had lost his mother some years before—he, as the eldest son, brought up his five sisters and brother with the true love and tenderness of a father and mother, imbued them with the same noble spirit of orthodox Judaism that he possessed, and was fondly devoted to them until his very end.

And with that self-same earnestness and sincerity of purpose that characterized him in all his undertakings, he organized the Jewish community in Georgetown, furnished for them a place for prayer when yet they had no synagogue, opened the doors of his home to the Meshulach or collector of charity from Palestine, or the maggid or preacher who came to address his brethren from a distant clime—to them and to all the poor and stricken he opened wide the doors of his house in brotherly hospitality. His house was known far and wide as the Hachnosath Orchim for all. And in New York, too, he earnestly loiled in the Jewish communal field.

In an unostentatious manner he organized a Harlem synagogue, was its main support, and, in fact, without that beating of trumpets that usually accompany such philanthropic actions, he has supported also another Harlem synagogue and has given a great deal of charity in the modest and unobtrusive manner characteristic of the true Jewish spirit.

This staunch upholder of orthodox Judaism, who always placed the observance of his religion above all worldly consideration, communed with his Maker in the holy language of his ancestors, in that sublime moment when he returned his soul to Him who breathed it within him, secure in the faith that it would be restored to him from under the wings of the Shechina in the bond of eternal life.

 their environment and are degenerate. "In such a species as man the variety or range of achievement and of elevation is enormous. Among men and their works we find, on the one hand, cathedrals and oratorios, poems and faith and charity and hope; on the other, slums and ugliness and prisons and spite and cruelty and greed. And we must not forget that want of harmony with environment may in some cases be the fault not of the individual, but of the environment. The problem, the main human problem, is how to deal with the earth now—now that we have attained to conscious control—so as to cease perpetuating the lower forms, and to encourage the production of the higher, by giving to all children born on the planet a fair chance of becoming, each in its own way, a noble specimen of developed humanity."

To the searching question, "What is meant by good and evil?" Sir Oliver replies, "Good is that which promotes development and is in harmony with the will of God. It is akin to health and beauty and happiness. Evil is that which retards or frustrates development and injures some part of the universe: It is akin to disease and ugliness and misery." Goodness is the supreme entity of the universe, which binds, as it were, even God Himself. "No existing universe can tend on the whole toward contraction and decay because that would foster annihilation, and so any incipient attempts would not have survived; consequently, an actually existing and flowing universe must, on the whole, cherish development, expansion, growth, and so tend toward infinity rather than toward zero. The problem is therefore only a variant of the general problem of existence. Given existence, of a non-stagnant kind, and ultimate development must be law. Good and evil can be defined in terms of development and decay respectively. This may be regarded as part of a revelation of the nature of God."

Sir Oliver has a suggestive passage on what he calls "cosmic intelligence." He tells us the earth is only one of many planets warmed by the sun, and the sun is only one of a myriad of similar suns. "We may reasonably conjecture, therefore, that in some of the innumerable worlds circling round those distant suns there must be beings far higher in the scale of existence than ourselves; indeed, we have no knowledge which enables us to assert the absence of intelligence anywhere." If there are some thousand million solar systems, or families of worlds, it is highly improbable that the only world of which we know the details—our own—contains the creature highest in the entire scale. The Ptolemaic idea, Sir Oliver says with just sarcasm, clings to some of us still—not now as regards the planet, but as regards man; and we, insignificant creatures, with senses only just open to the portentous meaning of the starry sky, presume—some of us—to deny the existence of higher powers and higher knowledge than our own.

 Further on he asks whether man is helped in his struggle upwards, and he replies that man is continually surrounded by a great loving kindness, the mainspring of joy and love and beauty, which we call the grace of God. God, therefore, is no mere abstraction or law.

More About the Campaign Against Sir Rufus Isaacs for Lord Chief Justice—London's Oldest Synagogue—"The Jews of To-day"—Anti-Semitism in England.

London, July 4, 1913.

The rumors of Lord Alverstone's immediately resigning his office as Lord Chief Justice are again about, but I believe the truth is that the leave of absence which he was given some months ago will be deemed to be extended for the few weeks which remain of the present term, and that his successor will be appointed in October before the courts meet for the Michaelmas sittings. It is, of course, well known that Sir Rufus Isaacs, as Attorney General, has the first claim to the post, and a claim which is based on his office has in his personal case (unlike some previous occasions) the unanimous support of the Bar and, what is more important, that of the Judges. I am informed that the Judges' desire to see him appointed has already had a formal though necessarily private expression, and that their views have been made known in high quarters. It is well known that the Bench includes men of all political views, in many cases very strongly held, so that its attitude is peculiarly significant. In the face of these facts the attempt which is being made boldly in the "Morning Post" and the "Spectator" and timidously in the "Observer" to prevent his accepting the appointment if he wishes it is peculiarly offensive. We have a right to have the attack put more plainly than those who make it apparently dare to do. If Sir Rufus Isaacs is unfit to be Lord Chief Justice he is obviously also unfit to be Attorney General. Not one of the criticisms of his discretion in the Marconi affair dared to make any reflection either on his integrity or on his ability as first law officer, and any such reflection was disowned by Mr. Balfour on behalf of responsible members of the Opposition in the House. It is to be hoped that he and the great majority of his party who think with him will now publicly disown this further attempt to impugn the character of Sir Rufus Isaacs.

For the first time in the history of the London and Middlesex Archaeological Society the general meeting of the members was held in a place of worship on July 1. Albert M. Hyamson read a paper on the history of the Spanish and Portuguese Synagogue in Bevis Marks, Houndsditch, in one of the rooms adjoining the building, and afterward showed the company over the synagogue.

The synagogue, he said, was one of great interest, especially to Jews, as it was the oldest in London, and, indeed throughout the country. It was opened for worship in 1702 and it belonged to the oldest Jewish community who settled in England, the Sephardim. There were, he pointed out, two bodies of Jews in England to-day—the Ashkanazin and the Sephardim—the former having come mostly from Germany and the latter being the descendants of the Jews, who were expelled from Spain and Portugal in the fifteenth century. Between the year 1290 and the time of Cromwell there were practically no Jews in England, excepting a few stray families, who were isolated, but later, when they began to return, one of them, a Dr. Lopez, rose to be court physician to Queen Elizabeth. It was he who was credited with having suggested to Shakespeare the character of Shylock.

His history, said the lecturer, was most interesting. He had been captured by Drake and taken to England, where he married a Jewess and settled in London, practicing medicine. Unfortunately, however, he interfered in politics, and was said to have attempted to poison the Portuguese Pretender and also the Queen. "Major Martin Hume, who investigated the story," said Mr. Hyamson, "was satisfied that this doctor was not guilty. It is known that the Queen hesitated a great deal before she signed his death warrant, and afterward she interested herself in his widow and sent her presents."

The first synagogue in London, was in a private house, the first room of which was used for prayer. It was in 1663 and 1664 that the Spanish and Portuguese Jews became organized in London and the laws of the congregation were regulated. The Jews at that time knew that they were only in England on sufferance. They had to be careful of their acts and conduct, and some of the regulations formed were remarkable. In 1699 a piece of land was acquired from the Speaker of the House of Commons, and a contract was entered into with a builder, who was a Quaker, to erect the synagogue at a cost of $13,250. The synagogue took three years to build, and when it was finished the Quaker builder handed back the money which would have come to him as profit. Queen Anne presented a beam to the synagogue, which is now somewhere in the ceiling.

The publishers of "The Jews of To-day" have done well to place before English readers Dr. Ruppin's book, which is one of the best studies of the Jewish problem as Jews feel it, and in the excellent translation of Miss Margery Bentwich and with Dr. Jacob's interesting introduction the book ought to find many readers. Dr. Ruppin's thesis is that assimilation has been a constant menace in the past to Judaism, only resisted by conscious, deliberate efforts; and that it is a particularly serious menace now and requires a correspondingly great effort of resistance. Arab and Greek civilization exercised considerable corrosive influence upon the Jewish people and absorbed large numbers of them. Persecution then and in later ages decimated the Jewish people, so that Leroy-Beaulieu can write that "but for the secession of thousands of its sons in every generation to Christianity Judaism would number four or five, perhaps even ten times the total of its adherents."

Dr. Ruppin does not go very deep into the forces which enabled the rest to retain and transmit their loyalty to Judaism, but he offers several reasons that appealed to him as to why the Jews' power of resistance to assimilation, are much slighter than they have been for many centuries. The rate of assimilation, he contends, grows as the percentage of Jews decreases; economic intercourse between Jew and non-Jew becomes livelier, the culture of the Gentile milieu is higher, and the prosperity of the Jews increases. One may dispute as to the several and joint effects of these various factors, but that they do in some measure operate as Dr. Ruppin says can, not be denied. Nor can it be denied that since the beginning of the nineteenth century they have been more actively in operation than during many earlier centuries. There is no reason to suppose that these external forces will lose their strength in the immediate future. An increasing number of Jews are passing from Eastern Europe to Western Europe and America, and even in Eastern Europe the industrial revolution is making rapid advances. All this means the exchange of Jewish education for Gentile education, of a tongue more or less characteristically Jewish for a purely alien tongue, of a Jewish culture for a cosmopolitan culture. It means also a weakening of orthodox Judaism in faith and in practice.

Dr. Ruppin shows by statistics how the Jewish birthrate is falling more quickly than the Gentile, how intermarriage (that is, the marriage of Jews with Christians) is becoming more common, how baptism is increasing. Most of these statistics he is compelled to draw from Germany, German Austria and Hungary, for others hardly exist. It would, however, be a mistake to generalize from them, for the fortunes of German Jewry and the Jewries directly under German influence have been peculiar. From all these facts of the present and probabilities of the future Dr. Ruppin draws the conclusion that the Jews are in very grave danger of losing their individuality as a people and becoming absorbed in the Gentile nations among which they live. There can be two opinions as to the extent of the danger in the early future; but nobody can deny that Judaism, exposed to the subtle and the direct assaults of powerful alien culture, is passing through a very grave trial. It can emerge only as it has emerged from earlier similar trials—by a deliberate resolute act of will. Dr. Ruppin argues very forcibly and very persuasively that that act of will must be along the lines of Zionism.

Your correspondent's reference to signs of anti-Semitic tendencies in England have been borne out by a striking address delivered recently here by the Rev. Morris Joseph. In this he reviewed the whole position and he quoted the remark of the novelist and thinker, H. G. Wells: "The Jews are a very clever people, but not clever enough to suppress their cleverness. An eager discussion followed the address, and a well-reasoned view of the whole session was taken by the chairman in his concluding speech. He was certainly inclined to think that the paper had shown only one side of the question. The position of the English Jew was widely different from that of his brethren in countries like Russia, Roumania, or even Austria. The concessions made to Jews in England in view of their religion were most generous. England was the Paradise of the Jew. If Christians said hard things of the Jews they also said hard things sometimes of one another. But he would not deny that there had been an increase of late in anti-Jewish feeling in this country. It was less easy, for example, for Jews to get into certain clubs now than it was six or seven years ago. The situation was difficult. They were a community separated from their neighbors by their religious practices, and this in itself suf-

We salute our old friend, Rabbi Moses "Menelaus" Gries, of Cleveland, the new chief of the "annual picnic." If he but hailed from a locality with a classical name one might extract a joke from the combination!

For the sake of our community we are glad that David Lamar does not hold himself out as "one of us." And, equally for the sake of our community, we hope that the world takes his statement that he is a Methodist and has never been inside of a synagogue in his life at its face value.

It is curious but characteristic to find ex-Premier Georges Clemenceau, of France, in open and avowed sympathy with the agitation now making for the righting of the wrongs of the Jews of Roumania, while M. Klotz, a Jew, the present French minister of internal affairs, publicly announced that he has had nothing to do with the issue.

The AJKO, of Berlin, has entered upon the publishing business and now issues a monthly, Der Orient, designed to treat of the economic development of the hither Orient. The initial number of the journal has just appeared and is replete with information germane to its purpose. We trust the magazine will prosper and expect it to be a mine of useful facts in an impartial manner on its chosen subject.

The recent elections in Moravia, where the anti-Semitic party triumphed, suggests the query to our contemporary, Die Welt, whether Jewish support of the Germanistic forces is worth while? This assumes that the Teutonic elements are rabidly anti-Semitic, and furthermore that their success is altogether due to the Jews. The former is doubtless true; of the latter we are not so certain.

Press dispatches inform us that the new national administration has consigned the high and important diplomatic posts of our country abroad as his legitimate prey to the party spoilsmen. We do not for one moment attach any serious credence to such news, but, for all that, we are still waiting, patiently waiting, for President Wilson to make his nomination of a great Jewish American. Is it never to happen in our lifetime? Since the 4th of March, beyond one or two minor officers of the medical reserve corps, no Jewish name has been sent to the Senate.

Rabbi Gerson B. Levi, the "summer editor" of The Reform Advocate, advises us that we can well get along without Alpha Delta Phi, which view, it goes without saying, is quite correct. Incidentally, too, we note that no other Jewish weekly journal in this country took the editorial position assumed by us anent this matter. It goes equally without saying, of course, that what we said of Alpha Delta Phi flowed from our internal knowledge of present and past conditions at the College of the City of New York; and that therefore this larger question looms up: Is it not time for Jews to regard all anti-Semitic manifestations in their proper light? If we are to be the cloak for attacks on other sections of the body politic, the world should know it and protect itself against them accordingly. Moreover, the Jews themselves will do well to note this peculiar form of prejudice, thrown out by the action of Alpha Delta Phi.

One may write ever so many letters to the proprietors of a periodical like The Outlook, where improper summer resort advertising, reflecting on the Jews, finds hospitality, or to a United States judge who indulges in incompetent obiter remarks about Jews in general when passing sentence upon a convicted perjurer who happened to be a Jew, and no real good will come of them. The judge will protest his philo-Semitism, for why should he not? The proprietors of The Outlook will fence and parry the argument and, in the end, will humbly admit that they do not boast of their love of social justice. What then? The inherent hatred of Jews harbored by many a non-Jew, unknown to us, unknown to himself perhaps, will continue. Let the majesty of the law step in and attempt to bridle men's tongues and passions. The New York civil rights law as amended this year was a step in the right direction and on this line tangible results may be attained. It is the only line

RABBINICAL MATRIMONIAL ACTIONS

WE very much regret to be remitted to a brief notice in the public prints for the staple of these remarks. Doubtless when the stenographic report of the document and the discussion thereon appears, we may have additional "pabulum" whereon to base our words. But, it would seem that Rabbi J. Leonard Levy, of Pittsburgh, our whilom friend Rav Yossel Loeb, of Bristol, regaled this year's "annual picnic" with some "clever" notions of his own on the province of the rabbi in the matter of eugenic marriages and the period stretching between the interlocutory and the final decree in divorce proceedings.

Rabbi Levy's "cooling periods" of three months in divorce cases are not novel. He has literally taken the idea from legal custom and transferred to the rabbinical domain that stretch of time intermediate the interlocutory and the final decree, as just mentioned, for the purpose of having the rabbi do his "fine work" with respect to reconciliations or the opportunities for remorse among infelicitous couples. So far as his suggestion goes, that rabbis should demand two weeks' notice from intending brides and benedicts for the purpose of investigating their records, his eugenic thought is equally not new. In the Anglican church the custom of publishing bans probably grew out of a similar desire. A very serious difficulty, however, for the rabbi would eventuate where the press of weddings were so great as to dangerously prevent his transacting all the "business" offered him, involving a corresponding loss of perquisites.

Quite seriously, however, it is just such half-baked opinions as these that have brought upon the Central Conference the disesteem in which it is held, in certain quarters. Why need rabbis trouble themselves about the procedure of the law courts? In divorce cases their duty lies to prevent litigation rather than to render it, once it has run its course, nugatory. So far as marital eugenics goes, the rabbi who meddles with this subject must expect that his subject prove refractory. After all is said and done the rabbi who aims to be the spiritual and moral leader of his people, who contributes according to his lights and leisure to their culture, who continues and perfects his religious studies, is doing all that may be fairly expected of one in his noble calling. Beyond these things for him lies destruction!

KEEP UP THE GOOD WORK

WE rejoice that the commission of inquiry into the charges made by ex-Sergeant Samuel Littman against the commandant and council of officers of the Forty-seventh Regiment, N. G. N. Y., has returned a finding which sustains the contention that prejudice against Jews who would attain commissioned rank sways the leaders of this military organization. We are glad, of course, that Governor Sulzer has approved the report thus rendered to him; knowing him as well as we do, and remembering his splendid record for fair dealing throughout his public career, no other result was to have been expected of him.

But, we have the earnest hope that, this Littman case decided, the inquiry into the condition of affairs which obtains in many divisions of our National Guard will proceed. Governor Sulzer now has, as we have heretofore pointed out, a striking opportunity to do a much-needed work of thorough "house cleaning" in the militia of the State. Our military establishments are supported by the money of the taxpayers, and it is manifestly proper that those who supply the funds for such a purpose shall determine upon what basis these are to be conducted. The Forty-seventh Regiment now stands convicted of improper conduct in a military organization; for, it is altogether inept, to speak of it in no other terms, for a regiment (maintained and existing for the public welfare) to distinguish between the rate and creed of its aspiring officers.

The Seventh Regiment and Squadron A, as we have mentioned heretofore, keep up an improper modus procedendi in the election of officers and even of company members. Let the Governor examine carefully into this state of affairs, and he will find that our contention rests upon an undoubted foundation of truth.

It is the experience of legislators that military men require a disproportionately large amount of legislation for their associations from year to year. Thus they are public bodies, taking up the time of the representatives of the people and consuming much of the annual appropriations for the conduct of the government of the State. Thus they ought to be stringently regulated, to the end that all able-bodied, competent citizens of the State have the same opportunity, other things being equal, to serve the State in their ranks.

On the 5th inst. Congressman Martin Dies told the House of Representatives that $15,000 had been paid to "our Hebrew brother," meaning thereby Samuel Untermyer, of New York, for his services in connection with the Pujo committee. Why Mr. Dies, in speaking of the fee paid Mr. Untermyer, should mention him on the floor of Congress as "our Hebrew brother" will not surprise those who recall his sneering references to Jews during the debate on immigration matters some years since. Mr. Dies apparently has no use for Jews, and does not attempt to conceal his venom. Fortunately Congressman Goldfogle was on hand on both occasions and promptly gave the quietus to his colleague. The Jewish constituents of Mr. Dies, and all friends of humanity in general, whether Jews or Gentiles, among them, will do well to remember his outbursts and, at the next appropriate opportunity, retire the Congressman to the engulfing, private life for which he seems to be ever so much better fitted than to be a legislator in a government of the people, by the people, for the people.

A HUMAN DIVINING ROD

יפקד ד אלקי הרוחות לכל-בשר איש עליהערה:

"Let the Lord, the God of the spirits of all flesh, appoint a man over the congregation." (Num. xxxvii, 16.)

THIS prayer for wise leadership was uttered by Moses on hearing the final decree which barred him from the Promised Land. Why the reference in this prayer to the God of the Spirits? Because—say our Rabbis—the spirit of each man holds a mystery all its own, scarcely fathomable by any one but God who is the "Chacham Harazim," the Knower of Mysteries; and it is the duty of the people's leader to sound and solve, like God, the mystery of each soul and guide each man accordingly. For a leader able to do this, Moses prayed.

This Midrash calls attention to a phase of the great man's work which is oft overlooked. We are wont to regard this work in connection with the group rather than with the individual. In the common mind, Moses is the liberator of the Jewish Nation, as Washington that of the American people. Does then the message, the example and the inspiration of a great man but affect masses and not men? Is Moses not the liberator of Jews, or Washington of Americans? How much of Washington is there in every American? How much of Moses in every Jew?

If Moses had but shaped the destinies of the people, and not the character of each man and woman in Israel; if he had but added a few impersonal pages to History, and not new varieties of souls to humanity, each bearing the impress of intimate contact with him; if he had stood aloof from the individual and his aspirations, and had not been stirred by the pathos of those thousands of human beings trying to read the various characters each saw burnt into his own soul, he would have indeed fallen short of the ideal of efficient leadership which he prayed to see embodied in his successor. But Moses' efficiency as a leader consisted in this: that he was not a potentate ruling from afar off, but a "faithful shepherd" tending each member of his flock according to his needs. He understood them not only collectively, but individually. He had the key to each heart. He grasped the mystery of each soul. He projected himself, by the power of sympathy that was his, into each life.

Chiefly, he helped each man to solve the mystery of his own soul. He helped men to understand themselves. For herein lies the true function of the great man: to make men know themselves. Self-ignorance is the most widespread of all evils. We know not the bad there is in us; but do we know the good—all the good—there is in us? We strive to learn so much; do we strive with equal zeal to study ourselves? to learn all the potentialities which lie hidden in us, all the vague stirrings that wait for action, all the silences that wait for voice? There are awful concealments in the human heart that are like the concealments of God in the universe, which wait for uncovering, for revelation. Sometimes an accident, a dramatic event, brings to light the hidden things of the soul; but how often are they buried forever? How many minds are consciously bent upon the glorious task of self-discovery? Incalculable are the losses humanity incurs through the self-ignorance of men. You probably know of the story of Rabbi Akiba, the great scholar, who is said to have discovered his aptitude for learning at the age of forty? Here at least twenty years were lost. Is it not a pity that self-knowledge did not come earlier? And then it was through the love of a woman that he found himself. But for this love, the great scholar would have remained the ignorant cowherd he had been before he read the mystery of his own soul by the soft light that streamed from the present eyes of his sweetheart.

Most of us need somebody else to furnish the light by which to read ourselves aright. We are like those savage tribes who for unconscionable centuries have run with naked feet over vast territories not knowing of the gold that slept beneath their blundering tread, until civilized man came to change the land of undug treasures into an Eldorado. Oft there are treasures, more precious than fine gold within a man's bosom, undug, undreamed of. Comes a great man, and floods this dark bosom with sudden light, and a seemingly barren waste is transformed into a human Eldorado. Some youthful, tongue-tied Demosthenes, riveted on the lips of the popular orator and entranced by the witchery of his eloquence, may discover in himself gifts of speech that sway the masses; some Saul, though by training a warrior, may, on chancing to meet a band of prophets, himself begin to prophesy; or, coming nearer to our text, some Joshua, bred to serve, may develop under the influence of a Moses, the power to rule a great nation.

Here, then, is the test of a truly great man: Does he bring out the best there is in the individuals standing within the range of his voice? Apply this test in each doubtful case. Do you happen to listen to a teacher gifted with the talent of magic utterance? Are you carried away by him to such an extent that for the moment you are lost to yourself, your soul bathing in his, your individuality utterly merged in his? Make no mistake about it—he is not the leader you should implicitly follow. He is but a clever spellbinder who has for the nonce so completely thrown around you the glamor of his personality that your own light has grown well-nigh extinct. But are you listening to a teacher who, on the contrary, unlocks for you your own heart, in whom you, far from losing, find yourself? Then know that he is the guide of your life. He will help you read the mysterious writing traced upon the scrolls of your soul by the "God of the Spirits." He will tell you not who he is but who you are. The ancients used a divining rod to discover the waters murmuring in the depths of the earth. Would you uncover the hidden wellsprings of your nature? Go to this teacher. He is your divining rod!

Congressman Jefferson M. Levy called the attention of the House of Representatives the other day to the fact that his name in the Congressional Record had been misprinted as "Lever." Ah! if the distinguished Representative but lived in England he would find a number of "Levers" whose names used to be what his still is! Doubtless they altered their cognomen so as to acquire a lever whereby to enter Christian society.

This year the sixty-first annual meeting of District Grand Lodge No. 2 of the Independent Order B'nai B'rith was held at Kansas City at the close of May. We are in receipt of the printed proceedings of the convention and note, in the first place, that our Western B'nai B'rith have fallen victims to the "simplified" spelling fad. Secondly, we observe with some concern that in this district of the order there was again a notable decrease in members, the suspensions for the year more than outbalancing the total of initiates. District No. 2 reached the high water mark of membership in 1910, since which time there has been a steady decline. We believe the officers will do well to bend their energies almost exclusively on propaganda work, for in this territory the B'nai B'rith ought to flourish notably and splendidly. Here, too, we find an endowment fund which is safely and conservatively managed, and the funds of which are properly conserved. In this, too, there is a net loss of members for the year closed. No less than seventy died, withdrew or were suspended, while a paltry two were admitted. In the face of this exhibit are we not safe in assuming that the era for endowments of the lodge variety has gone never to return, so far as the older section of our community in this country is concerned?

Now that we have insistently settled down into the customary communal dullness of midsummer, the only "events" to disturb our equanimity are the more or less sporadic "services" conducted here, there and everywhere by our friends, the Reform rabbis. All sorts and conditions of summer resorts, not to speak of all sorts and conditions of Jews, fall a prey to their attempts to keep the torch of our faith brightly burning during the "heated term."

The writer in The New Orleans Picayune is in error when he says that Dr. Stephen S. Wise was a rabbinical hotspur from the very moment of his entry in the pulpit of Congregation B'nai Jeshurun more than twenty years ago. By his words one would imagine that Dr. Wise then and there trumpeted forth his independence of ministerial conventions and had his flock by the ears, as it were. The contrary was indeed the case; Dr. Wise then was a very young man, scarcely past his majority and as meek as a low-caste Hindu. It was understood at the time and is well known since that he at the time agreed not to eat trefah in public nor to ride or smoke on Shabbos, and, we are free to add, religiously lived up to his agreement. The "free pulpit" and the "free pew" and the other slogans were the product of a much later time.

We are pleased to note that the heads of the Roman Catholic Church have placed a book in which the origin of the Jewish hatred for Jesus and his followers is set forth upon the famed Index Expurgatorius. Such action signifies that observant Catholics will not read, indeed literally touch, the volume. Jewish hatred for Jesus of Nazareth and his followers is quite non-existent. Only when the dastardly crimes committed by Christians in the name of their faith against Jews occur is there such a thing as Jewish loathing of the miscreants.

THE PROPOSED ELECTION IN CO. "B."

It is to be hoped that the statement attributed to Governor Sulzer, that unless Company "B" of the Forty-seventh Regiment elects Sergeant Littman as a commissioned officer, he will disband the company, is not true. This course, which would, it seems, be in violation of the military code, wouldn't help the situation at all, and the Jewish community wouldn't ask it.

Company "B" is not, nor has it been charged with any offense, even of prejudice against Littman. The offense is charged against, it seems, the field, staff and line officers of the regiment represented by the colonel, who seemed to voice their opinion, as to the desirability of a Jew in the officers' rank.

The military code provides for the manner of electing officers in the regiments of the National Guard, and minutely describes how they are to be elected by the members of the company, as to captains and lieutenants. Every member of the company who is entitled to vote has the right to determine his choice without dictation or interference. An election under duress, or under threat of disbandment, would be no election at all in the meaning of the code; hence it would be folly to proclaim that unless a particular soldier is elected, or the failure to elect any particular person that the company will be disbanded. Even the Governor of the State, as commander-in-chief of the State forces, must exercise his command in accordance with the provisions of the military code and cannot override it.

The proper course to pursue, it may be submitted, in a case of this nature is to determine whether conditions amongst the field, staff and line are such that there is actual discrimination existing, such as will prevent the entry into the regiment of members of any particular faith, and in the event that it is found that this is so—and in the particular case under consideration it seems to be so adjudged—then the whole regiment ought to be disbanded and reorganized for the good of the service.

To have Sergeant Littman re-enlist, run for the office of lieutenant, and in case of his defeat have his company disbanded, doesn't meet the situation, and no well-meaning Hebrew should assent to this course.

Lines on the Inscription,

"KNOW BEFORE WHOM THOU STANDEST."

By the Late Penina Moise.

A voice of power from the elder time,
A voice that homage from the earth commandeth,
On Israel calls with energy sublime,
To know in whose dread presence he here standeth.

It bids him at the portal put away
His sandal sullied o'er with sordid dust;
In godliness his spirit to array,
Or ere he seeks the Merciful and Just.

Passions profane, ye mortals cast afar,
And let your hearts to holy love expand,
Ere ye the sanctuary's gates unbar,
Or dare before Omnipotence to stand.

In vain would ye some worldly idiot hide
Within the temple of the spirit shined,
Some golden monster blindly deified,
To which immortal hope has been resigned.

No fiber in the meshes of temptation,
By the all-seeing eye has been unscanned;
No lure that leads thy soul from its salvation
Evades the searcher before whom ye stand.

If wrath towards thy fellow man remain
In thy frail bosom an abiding guest,
Seek not the altar, like the vengeful Cain,
With malice 'gainst thy brethren in thy breast.

E'en at the threshold the dark feeling cast,
Whose shadow dwelt upon thy brow too long,
Thou stand'st before the present, future, past!
The Judge Supreme of every human wrong.

Enter not lightly then the house of prayer,
Nor hymn with lips of guile the praise of God;
Balm will be found for meek contrition there,
For contumacy, an impending rod.

Behold yon testimonial tablet traced
By Judah's Providence with outstretched hand;
List to the voice that thunders from the waste,
Know ye before whose majesty ye stand!

The Mission of Israel.
"In the great story of mankind no event is in vain," said Rabbi Leon Albaum, of Salt Lake City, in a recent sermon. "No nation struts its brief hour on the stage without fulfilling a distinct purpose in the stupendous drama. Consider in what a ceaseless flow people migrated over the earth since Israel left Egypt. Think of all the changes that have come over the world. What a constant procession there has been of nations, and what changes of civilization has the world not witnessed during these thousands of years; what development there has been in human thought and discovery; how institutions and ideas have been revolutionized."
"In how many climes has Israel not lived? With how many races has he not come in contact? How the march of events has carried him hither and thither to make acquaintance with the perpetual flux of things to which history bears evidence. It is, he alone of the innumerable characters that played their parts in the real human drama who has preserved an identity of historic consciousness and defies all changes."

An Example of Russian Tyranny.
A further example of the scandalous character of the Russian Government is given by a writer in the June issue of the London "Westminster Review." In the course of an article on the sufferings of the Poles he told the following story: Another wretched feature of this organized tyranny is the system of pogrom, whereby incipient insurrections are fomented by the agents of the Government itself in order that an excuse may be obtained for a course of savage suppression. Recently the Poles have been incited against the Jews; and to promote a boycott against them. The Poles fell into the trap, and even "the Kultura Polska caught the anti-Jewish infection." As a Polish university, schools and all political organizations have been ruthlessly suppressed, this was the only institution left which united the intellectual elements of Poland together. It was really a kind of parliament founded on culture. Hence, it was much disliked by the powers that be over there. Curiously enough the Government—so much opposed to the Jewish element—now stepped in as their friends. The Governor of Warsaw issued an order suppressing the "Kultura" and all its branches, libraries and other institutions supported by it.

As a result of a conference recently held at St. Petersburg, in which Baron V. Günzburg, Advocates Shosberg, Sheftel and Kullisher, and other well-known Russian Jews participated, it was resolved to organize, with the co-operation of the Jewish Historical and Ethnographical Society, an ethnographical expedition to three hundred places in Russia, for the purpose of collecting various historic documents, legends, ancient ornaments, melodies, etc. A preliminary expedition, under M. Rappaport, recently visited fifteen towns and returned with a rich collection, comprising 300 legends, 700 songs, 400 photographs and 200 articles.

The management of the Hamburg-American Line have sent Mayor Gaynor a check for $5,000 of the fund collected from admissions to the steamship Imperator. At present classes are being formed for teaching bookkeeping, stenography, typewriting, languages, English to foreigners and preparing for civil service examinations. All young men are cordially invited.

Mr. George Kleine and managers Cohan & Harris have decided to continue the exhibition of the "Quo Vadis?" photo drama at the Astor Theatre until the first week in September, giving way at that time to George M. Cohan's dramatization of "Seven Keys to Baldpate," which is scheduled to open there on Labor Day, Monday, September 1. Incidentally, the exhibitors and delegates to the recent motion picture conclave held at the Grand Central Palace displayed almost as much interest in viewing the picture projection of Stenkiewicz's world renowned romance as they did in the convention for which they were assembled, all agreeing that photographers of "Quo Vadis?" in point of technical worth, massiveness of production and cameratic clearness have attained the pinnacle in the art of animated films.

LITERARY.

"Ozar Yisrael," by J. D. Eisenstein. Vol. IX. A general opinion circulates in Europe, especially in Russia, that all the literary products which are raised and produced on American soil, in the land of the hurry-up life, are either of no special value or beneath criticism altogether. It is true, that this opinion is not wholly groundless, but, of course, there are exceptions to every rule, and one of those exceptions is Mr. Eisenstein's Hebrew Encyclopedia, whose ninth volume is before us. It is, as the previous one, full of information and of articles of great importance and of undoubted usefulness to every reader who is loyal to the Jewish tradition and to whom the books of Moses are at least of no less concern than the quasi-scientific imaginations of the Bible biters and tradition haters.

Most of the articles are written by the tireless editor, Mr. Eisenstein, and it is a pity indeed, that many able writers, who are capable of helping him, are staying aloof, thus preventing him from handling the material he utilizes with more care. For instance, it is stated in this encyclopedia that H. Rabinovitz was born in 1832 and died in 1839, instead of 1889, while in the former case it appears that he lived only seven years.

To the article "Zaphnath-Paaneah," the editor should have added the version of the Septuagint and the meaning of Egyptian scholars, instead of the Baal Haturim. In the article "Riga," he didn't mention the most prominent maskilim of this city, W. Caplan, Dr. A. Ehrlich and A. E. Pumpiansky. The biography of the first and foremost real European journalist in our Hebrew literature, Dr. L. Kantor, is missing, while biographies of much lesser writers are included; the biography of Dr. Isaac Kaminer is also missing, although he occupies a prominent place in our literature. Many notable Talmudical sages, as well as many important cities are not mentioned at all. I also think that Remus and Romulus, who are mentioned in Talmud and in Midrash, as well as in the world's literature, should have been mentioned, also Copernicus deserves a place, for he, as a scientist, belongs to all nations.

The article "Koran" has no bibliography, which is a necessary thing in general and especially for an article of this nature, in the bibliography of the article "Roshey Tevos" is missing, one of the best books in this line by Mayer Halperin of Minsk; in the article "Kabalah," by Dr. Guenzig, which, by the way, is the best and the most comprehensive, are missing in its bibliography two very important books, "Vikuach al Chochmath Hakabalah," by S. D. Luzzatto, and "Behinath Hakabalah," edited by Reggio. The article "Cozakim" is not in place and the editor should have had it under "Gzerath Tach," which is known to every one who is at all familiar with the Jewish history and with this most tragic epoch in it.

Besides Dr. Guenzig's article, which I mentioned already, almost all the articles of Mr. Eisenstein, especially those on Talmudical subjects, are more or less satisfactory and show the enormous zeal, the vast energy and the good will of the editor. The articles of Dr. Landau, N. N. Hurwitz, Dr. Rubin, Dr. Pozmansky and many, many others, deserve mention and recognition and they will prove of great interest to their readers. Of course it is to be expected that such a book, especially by lacking moral support, should have shortcomings, misprints and not always correct statements.

But a book of this kind should be judged as a whole and not by its parts, and as a whole, this book deserves all the credit and its editor full encouragement and sincere gratitude. In Russia they started to think of a Hebrew encyclopedia almost twenty years ago and they are still thinking and calculating and making plans, while Eisenstein will soon be done with the tenth, which is also the last volume of this stupendous undertaking, and "Fins coronat opus." This volume is sufficiently described by its title and represents an interesting attempt on the part of representatives of various faiths to write about religion and its teachings in a distinctly non-sectarian manner. The chapters in the book deal with God's law, with incarnation, redemption, atonement, judgment, salvation, etc., and are from the pens of writers belonging to eight diverse denominations. Methodist, dwelling in harmony with the Jewish expiator.

The Jew in the book is Rabbi Maurice H. Harris, who writes on judgment in his usual simple, yet exceedingly effective, expository style. Rabbi Harris does not hesitate to cite the Rabbinic literature for his statements; if there be one criticism that may be made it is that Rabbi Harris paints the concept of sin somewhat too somberly for a Jew.

The book is interesting and ought to find wide dissemination wherever the idea of the unification of religions finds acceptance.

VOX POPULI.

To Rabbi Henry Cohen, Temple B'nai Israel, Galveston, Texas.

(By Meigs O. Frost.)

Some few persons we have known stand out by themselves alone; They're the sort that, when you look for them—they're there!

They're the breed of men who pray when the outlook's somber-gray, But they never let their efforts stop with prayer.

University degrees they may sport like A B C's,

But it never seems to cause their heads to swell;

They're sky pilots, but they're human, and for man or child or woman,

Why, they'd storm the brimstone battlements of hell.

And we're sorter proud of one that we've got in Galveston,

Who forgot long since there's such a word as "snob."

From our wharves clear to our beach lies his workshop; he may preach,

But for seven days a week he's on the job.

When the sweating steerage lands queerly clad and unwashed hands,

Thanking God they're off a pitching liner's deck,

Where the round-eyed babies cry and the shrill complaints rise high,

There you'll find him, plunged in work up to his neck.

We have known and loved him long, and you bet we're for him—strong;

He's been with us in our laughter and our tears.

He's a human dynamo, and we hope he's geared to go

Ever stronger with the passing of the years.

Isn't much that you can say when you're feeling that-a-way

'Bout a chap who shows you God Almighty's plan,

But we'd like to have him know—Jew or Gentile—high or low—

That our hats are off to him—a man-size man.

As Others See Us.

By John Graham Brooks.*

Under this title, the well-known author and lecturer has written a volume in which he collects criticisms of American life, institutions, manners, etc., emanating from various foreign authors. He goes back as far as the beginning of the last century on the chapter, "Who is the American?" Mr. Brooks, whose own comments are by no means the least interesting part of the book, has this to say of the Jews of America: "New York, he says, is already the chief Jewish city of the world. It will very soon have a million Hebrews. They come with qualities and traditions so diverse that their competition among themselves (as between German and Russian Jews) is as relentless as it is against any other class of the community."

Intelligent enough to leave petty gambling and drunkenness to the Christians, they are appropriating rapidly the very forms of property which give them the strongest grip upon the destinies of the city. Their capacity for work, their thrift, their family devotion, their temperance and consequent low death rate, their sacrifices for education, their passion for individualism, already modify our life, although in our eighty-five millions they are a tiny fraction of a million and a half. Christians have never hesitated to classify and characterize the Jews as specifically this or that. But as we know them better, the characterization becomes blurred and uncertain. How confidently we have repeated it! The Jew is not a "producer." He swaps and bargains and exchanges, but shuns the processes of producing wealth. It is very slovenly reasoning to shut out these trading activities from "production," but apart from this, the slightest observation would correct this easy judgment. One of our great industries is the clothing trade, which in its entire process is largely in the hands of Jews, as other industries are in part on their purely "productive" side.

I have asked a great many people what one quality could surely be fixed upon the American. I have a long list of answers, but the one that heads the list in points of frequency is that the American above all other peoples is "adaptable." It is, of course, meant by this that the young American is early thrown upon his own resources; that our society has such mobility and range of opportunity as to create the capacity for self-adjustment—of falling upon the feet—in whatever part of the world one alights. But are we more "adaptable" than the Jew? With centuries of savage hounding hither and yon, what race ever had such occasion and necessity to learn adaptability as this one? Is there any delay in adjusting themselves to our economic and educational opportunities? If the Jew has a department store in a Southern city he succeeds because he is so flexible in falling in with the peculiarities of blacks and whites alike. To say Miss or Mrs. to the colored purchaser is to get trade. I hear it charged against the Jew that he will not stay upon a farm. As small farming has hitherto been done, this refusal of the Jew without capital is an assured sign of his intelligence. There is already indication that when farming is raised to its proper level; when science and good business methods are applied to it; when, in a word, it is commercialized and well worth doing, the Jew will be at the front in this work. To say that this people loves money, is sharp at a trade, has push and is aggressive, is merely to repeat what no end of foreigners have ascribed to Yankees generally. An Englishman, who did business for several years in this country between 1840 and 1850 warns his countrymen against the Americans in these words: "Let him gain a foothold and before you are aware of it, you will find his hand laid upon all you possess, from your pocket handkerchief to the house that covers your head." A friend, who has published a monograph on race questions, tells me there is one trait that he is sure is peculiar to Hebrews. Their aggressiveness has the unflinching trait of "intellectual impudence." Frechheit is a fair translation of this modified "impudence," and I have often heard in Germany that the truest mark of the Jew was this same Frechheit. But to what people under the sun would this name not be affixed, if they were as persistent in playing the accepted competitive games as are the Jews? This labelling faces ill, even with a race so sharply outlined as the Hebrew.

BROOKLYN NOTES.

Y. M. H. A. In spite of the weather and the fact that July and August are generally months during which most activities are allowed to lag, the building of the Young Men's Hebrew Association, 345 Ninth street, is the scene of life and enthusiasm.

The Young Men's Hebrew Association now stands first in the Metropolitan Debating League, having defeated several Y. M. C. H.'s and other institutions. It holds the championship of its division in baseball, and may be awarded the championship of the Y. M. H. A. League. The relay team of the association won the championship and a silk pennant at the last meeting, and it looks as if many more honors will be carried off in the outdoor meet, soon to take place at Pelham Bay.

Temple Beth Emeth, Flatbush. The exercises attending the laying of the cornerstone of the new synagogue to be erected by Temple Beth Emeth, Flatbush, will take place this Sunday afternoon, July 20, at 3 p. m., at the corner of Marlborough road and Church avenue. The speakers will be Rev. Dr. Joseph Silverman, Rev. Madison C. Peters, Rev. Dr. Rudolph Grossman, Rev. Clifton H. Levy, Father Wm. J. Costello, pastor of the Holy Innocents' Church, Flatbush, and Rev. Dr. Nathan Gordon, of Mont-real. Hon. Mitchell May, Secretary of State, will preside.

Rev. Alexander Lyons, Rev. Simon R. Cohen, Rev. Samuel J. Levinson will also speak, as will Messrs. Wm. Goldschmidt and Maurice P. Davidson, of the congregation.

Frank Gustavson was arraigned before Magistrate Dodd in the Fifth avenue police court last Friday charged with disturbing the worshippers of the Congregation Agudath Achim, No. 324 Forty-seventh street. It was charged that Gustavson beat carpets and made other noises during the holding of services. Magistrate Dodd postponed the case until this morning, in the meantime admonishing Gustavson not to do anything spiteful.

Plow of Biblical Times Described. A combined plow and seeder or planter invented by Abraham and used by the Babylonians 3,300 years ago is described in detail in the current number of the University Museum Journal.

The description was worked up from a picture of a plow found on one of the Babylonian bricks several years ago, but the significance of the prehistoric relic has only recently been discovered by the museum's archaeologists.

The Journal says the clay tablet at the museum is definitely fixed as coming from the fourteenth century before the Christian era and is the first representation of a plow that exists in this section. Some kind of plow must have been used from the earliest antiquity, but the one described is different.

It is the oldest combination agricultural implement known and it may be said that present day manufacturers have no farm tool which does the work of a combined plow and seeder or planter.

The picture shows three men operating the plow. One is the driver, a second holds the plow handles and the third pours from a bag he carries grain, which feeds down through a funnel and tube to the earth so that the seed is covered by the soil turned over by the plow. The implement was evidently built on the principle of the modern seeder or planter, but the latter is used after the ground has already been plowed.

A few years ago D. Clay, on looking at the Babylonian brick, noticed the impressions of the seal were broken and not one perfect one remained, although there were traces of many impressions. He says the plow was invented by Abraham, according to the Hebrew Midrash on Genesis, a work of the second century. In this so-called Book of Jubilees it is related that before the days of Abraham persons were punished for their sins in many ways, but when they gave themselves over to Satan that Prince of the Power of the Air repaid the sinners by sending ravens which ate all the grain as fast as it was plowed, as at that time there was no known way by which grain could be covered.

When Abraham came to manhood he changed all this. According to the authority mentioned, "Abraham taught those who made implements for oxen, the artificers in wood, and they made a vessel above the ground, facing the frame of the plow, in order to put the seed therein, and the seed fell down therefrom upon the share of the plow and was hidden in the earth, and they no longer feared the ravens. And after this manner they made vessels above the ground on all the frames of their plows, and they sowed and tilled all the land, according as Abraham had commanded them, and they no longer feared the birds."

The Jews and Child Life. Miss Kitty Cheatham, the distinguished American disease, who is now appearing in London, in an interview with a reporter for a Jewish newspaper stated that the Jewish audiences are particularly susceptible to the songs and the poems of child life. Miss Cheatham, who has traveled all over the world, has been struck with this unvarying circumstance wherever she has been. "There is not the least doubt," she says, "that love for the child is innate in the Jewish soul." Miss Cheatham, in speaking of her Jewish audiences in New York, said, "they are dear people and they possess, moreover, that emotional temperament which distinguishes us all in varying degrees."

CORRESPONDENCE.

Roumania Oppresses Jews.

Editor HEBREW STANDARD: Ex-Premier Clemenceau has just published a stirring article on the condition of the Roumanian Jews, "the last serfs still existing in Europe," as they were recently called by an Italian writer.

Although M. Clemenceau said they have now escaped from Turkish bondage, racial prejudice is so strong in the Balkans that the advantage of not being regularly slaughtered in the future is the principal benefit they reap from the change, which in every way is a change of masters only.

Among Roumanians whose high sense of civilization in other respects cannot be doubted, the anti-semitic feeling has now reached the last degree of intensity. The country has created her Jewish population out of the civil and political emancipation, which she promised the great powers at the Berlin Congress of 1870 to give them as the price of her establishment as an independent nation.

The clause in the treaty of Berlin expressly states that in Roumania differences in religion shall not be a reason for exclusion from civil and political rights, public employment and posts of honor. To this clause Roumania subscribed only after the rest of Europe had absolutely insisted upon it.

For eight years nothing of a practical nature was done to keep the promise to the powers, and in 1879 a new law was passed permitting foreigners—meaning, of course, Jews; thousands of families of whom had been in Roumania for centuries—to become naturalized by a special act of Parliament in each case.

At length, after urgent complaints of the powers, the clause in the Berlin treaty was made a law and Roumania became a separate kingdom.

Nevertheless, in the last forty years less than 200 Jews have been admitted to citizenship. They are to-day foreigners in the country in which they were born—foreigners, although their establishment in the principalities of the Danube is proved by the records of the thirteenth or fourteenth centuries, and despite the fact that they share all the public burdens, including the heaviest of all military service.

They are foreigners, although they belong to no other nation and can claim no protection from any other power, thus forming an international monstrosity by having no country.

The Jewish Roumanian soldier, who shed his blood on the field of battle, is not allowed to enter a workshop because he is a foreigner. His children are not admitted to school because they are also foreigners.

Only Jews of Dobroudja, annexed by Roumania in 1878, and of Silistria, recently ceded by Bulgaria, are citizens in consequence of a special treaty.

This is despite the fact that the Israelite inhabitants of Roumania have always shown themselves perfectly loyal and the development of the country's resources is largely due to their efforts.

A. B., M. A., M. D., (John Hopkins). Very truly yours, LEONARD KEENE HIRSHBERG, Baltimore, Md., July 14, 1913.

The welcome announcement for the coming week at the Brighton Beach Music Hall will be the return of Gus Edwards, the well-known composer of popular songs, and his famous "Song Revue." "Women have more strength in their looks than we have in our laws, and more power by their tears than we have by our arguments." This is the fundamental idea of the story, "The Ne'er to Return Road," which was written by Mrs. Otis Skinner and will be presented in moving pictures at the Regent Theatre, 116th street and 87th avenue, for three days, commencing Monday, July 21. The theme of the story is beautiful, and the action in the play is intense and gripping in interest.

CHILDREN'S PAGE.

Rabbi Chanina Ben Dosa

Dear Children:—

When I first began to teach you the Pirke Aboth, or Sayings of the Jewish Fathers, I told you that the men of the Great Synagogue said that the universe rests upon three bases, the Torah, divine worship and the performance of charitable deeds. These are the three feet of the golden table which is placed before every pious man in the future life in reward for his righteousness in this life. This is the table that the wife of Rabbi Chanina Ben Dosa saw in a dream, and it is through this vision that we will be able to understand the second maxim of Rabbi Chanina Ben Dosa, which is as follows: "In him with whom good deeds have greater weight than mere knowledge, the knowledge he acquires endureth; but if mere knowledge have greater weight with him, his knowledge will not endure."

Can every man have this perfect table in the future life? Here, for instance, is Rabbi Chanina Ben Dosa, a man who studied the Torah day and night, a man who worshipped his Creator with all his heart, with all his soul and with all his might, two feet of his heavenly table were certainly there, but how about the third? What charitable deeds could he perform? He had no money with which to help the poor. If only something was given them from heaven that would enable them to perform charitable deeds how happy would they be then!

And here comes the great lesson that the life of Rabbi Chanina Ben Dosa teaches to humanity for all generations. Oh, poor man, do not despair of your perfect reward in the great Hereafter. Look at Rabbi Chanina Ben Dosa, whose prayers were so acceptable to the Most High just because of his poverty, because being a poor man his heart was tender and sympathetic. If some one in misery came to him he could not give him any money, but he gave him his heart. He could feel with him, he could weep with him, and when it was necessary he could smile encouragingly at him and save him from the darkness of despair, and the whiteness of his teeth which he showed in a smile was more refreshing to the sorrowful one than a glass of milk.

Where are the gifts of the rich? 'Tis true they have helped the poor in their day, but how much of it endured after they were gone, and how much humiliation did the poor man taste when partaking of the bounty of the rich? How much envy did their lavish display of wasteful extravagance arouse in the heart of him whose offsprings, wasted with sickness, were crying for a crust of bread, and he had it not to give to them!

And here was the wife of Rabbi Chanina Ben Dosa wondering if they would have a perfect table in the Hereafter? If the foot called "the performance of charitable deeds" would also support their table, seeing they were so poor and had not the wherewithal to practice charity!

The answer was given from heaven: "Do not let the acquisition of your worldly knowledge, which measures everything by the standard of gold, have greater weight with you than your good deeds, for if you do you will become a prey to despair and your knowledge will depart from you." And she saw in her dream that now their table was perfect, but if she and her husband would become rich instead of remaining poor, then the foot of the performance of charitable deeds would be missing from their table, for, judged by his deeds, a millionaire philanthropist was a pauper in comparison with Rabbi Chanina Ben Dosa.
