"R. S. V. P."

By Montague Glass

It was the 10th of the month, and Abe Potash, of Potash & Perlmutter, was going through the firm mail with an exploratory thumb and finger, looking for checks.

"Well, Mawruss," he said to his partner, Morris Perlmutter, "all of them high-tone customers of yours, they don't take it so particular that they should pay on the day, Mawruss. If they was only so prompt with checks as they was to claim deductions, Mawruss, you and me would have no worries. I think some of 'em finds a shortage in the shipment before they open the packing case that the goods come in. Take your friend Hyman Maimin, of Saracuse—nothing suits him. He always kicks that the goods ain't made up right, or we ain't sent him enough fancies, or something like that. Five or six letters he writes us, Mawruss, when he gets the goods; but when he got to pay for 'em, Mawruss, that's something else again. You might think postage-stamps was solitaire diamonds, and that he dassen't use 'em!"

"Quit your kicking," Perlmutter broke in. "This is only the 10th of the month."

"I know it," said Abe. "We should have had a check by the 10th of last month, but"—here Abe's eye lit upon an envelope directed in the handwriting of Hyman Maimin—"I guess there was some good reason for the delay," he went on evenly. "Anyhow, here's a letter from him now."

He tore open the envelope and hurriedly removed the enclosed letter. Then he took the envelope, blew it wide open, and shook it up and down, but no check fell out.

"Did y'ever see the like?" he exclaimed. "Sends us a letter and no check!"

"Why, it ain't a letter," Morris said. "It is an advertisement."

Abe's face grew white.

"A meeting of creditors!" he gasped.

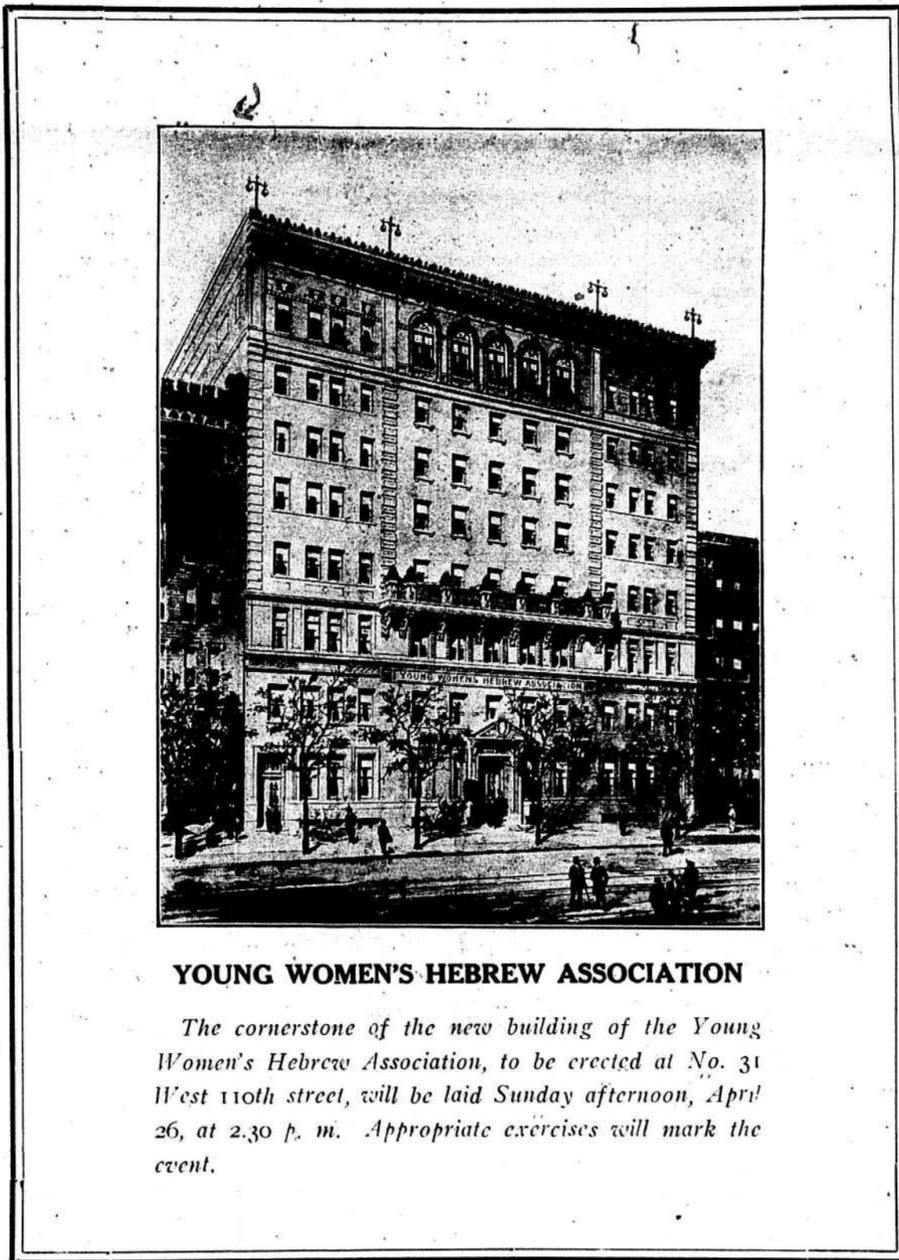

Morris grabbed the missive from his partner and spread it out on the table.

"Hello!" he exclaimed, a great smile of relief spreading itself about he read, "request the pleasure of Potash & Perlmutter's company at the marriage of their daughter Tillie to Mr. Hyman Maimin, Sunday, March 19, at seven o'clock p. m.,

"What is that 'R. S. V. P.' to residence of bride?" Abe Potash asked. Morris reflected for a moment.

his ears. "It's a wedding invitation!" he held it up to the light. "Mr. and Mrs. Marcus Bramson,"

"That means," he said at length, "that we should know where to send the present to."

"How do you make that out?" said Abe.

"'R. S. V. P.,'" Morris replied, emphasizing each letter with a motion of his hand, "means 'Remember to send wedding present.'"

"But," Abe replied, "when I went to night school, we spelt 'wedding' with a W."

"A greenhorn like Maimin," said Morris, "don't know no better."

"He knows enough to ask for a wedding present, Mawruss," Abe commented, "even if he don't know how to spell it. We'll send him a wedding present, Mawruss! We'll send him a summons from the court, that's what we'll send him!"

Morris shook his head.

"That ain't no way to talk, Abe," he said. "If a customer gets married, we got to send him a wedding present. It don't cost much, and if Hyman Maimin gets a couple of thousand dollars with this Miss—Miss—"

"Advance Credit Clothing Company," Abe helped out.

Morris nodded.

"Then he buys more goods, ain't it?" he concluded.

"Let him pay for what he's got," Abe rejoined.

"It just slipped his mind. He'll pay up, fast enough, after he gets married."

"All right! Wait till he pays up, and then we'll give him a present."

"Now looky here, Abe," Morris protested, "you can't be small in a matter of this kind. I'll draw a check for twenty-five dollars, and—"

"Twenty-five dollars!" Abe screamed. "You're crazy! When you was married last year, I'd like to know who gives you a present for twenty-five dollars?"

"Why, you did, Abe," Morris replied.

"Me?" Abe cried. "Say, Mawruss, I want to tell you something. If you can buy a fine sterling silver bumbum dish, like what I give you, for twenty-five dollars, I'll take it off your hands for twenty-seven fifty any day!"

"But, Abe—"

"Another thing, Mawruss," Abe went on. "If you don't like that dish, there ain't no law compelling you to keep it, you understand. Send it back. My Rosie can use it. Maybe we ain't so stylish like your Minnie, Mawruss; but if we don't have bumbums every day, we could put dill pickles into it!"

"One moment," Morris protested. "I ain't saying anything about that bumbum dish, Abe. All I mean that if you give me such a high-price present when I get married, that's all the more reason why we should give a high-price present to a customer what we will make money on. I ain't no customer, Abe."

"I know you ain't," said Abe. "You're only a partner, and I don't make any money on you, neither."

Morris shrugged his shoulders.

"What's the use of wasting more time about it, Abe?" he said. "Go ahead and buy a present."

"Me buy it!" Abe cried. "You know yourself, Mawruss, I ain't a success with presents. You draw the check and get your Minnie to buy it. She's an up-to-date woman, Mawruss, while my Rosie is a back number. She don't know nothing but to keep a good house, Mawruss. Sterling silver bumbum dishes she don't know, Mawruss. If I took her advice, you wouldn't got no bumbum dish. Nutpicks, Mawruss, from the five and ten cent store, that's what you'd got. You might appreciate them, Mawruss; but a sterling silver—"

At this juncture Morris took refuge in the outer office, where Miss Cohen, the bookkeeper, was taking off her wraps.

"Miss Cohen," he said, "draw a check for twenty-five dollars to bearer, and enter it up as a gratification to Hyman Maimin."

At dinner that evening Morris handed the check over to his wife.

"Here, Minnie," he said, "Abe wants you should buy a wedding present for a customer."

"What kind of a wedding present?" Mrs. Perlmutter asked.

"Something in solid sterling silver, like that bumbum dish what Abe gave us."

"But, Mawruss," she protested, "you know we got that bonbon dish locked away in the sideboard, and we never take it out. Let's give 'em something useful."

"Suit yourself," Morris replied. "Only don't bother me about it."

"All right," Mrs. Perlmutter said. "Leave me the name and address, and I'll see that they send it direct from the store. I'll put one of your cards inside."

"And another thing," Morris concluded. "See that you don't hold nothing out on us by way of commission."

Mrs. Perlmutter smiled serenely. "I won't," she said, in dulcet tones.

II.

It was the fourth day after Potash & Perlmutter's receipt of the wedding invitation. When Morris Perlmutter entered the private office he found Abe Potash in the absorbed perusal of the Daily Cloak and Suit Record. Abe looked up and saluted his partner with a malignant grin.

"Well, Mawruss," he said, "I suppose you sent that present to Hyman Maimin?"

"I sent it off long since already," Morris replied.

"I hope it was a nice one, Mawruss," Abe went on. "I hope it was a real nice one. I'm sorry now, Mawruss, we didn't spend fifty dollars. That would have made it an even seven hundred, instead of only six hundred and seventy-five, that Hyman Maimin owes us."

"What d'ye mean?" cried Morris. "I don't mean nothing, Mawruss—nothing at all," said Abe, with ironical emphasis. He handed the paper to Morris. "Here, look for yourself."

He pointed with a trembling forefinger at the "business troubles" column, and Morris' eyes seemed to bulge out of his head as he scanned the printed page.

A petition in bankruptcy was filed late yesterday afternoon against Hyman Maimin, 83 West Tonowanda street, Syracuse. It is claimed that he transferred assets to the amount of eight thousand dollars last week. Mr. Maimin says that he has been doing business at a heavy loss of late, but that he hopes to be able to resume. A settlement of thirty cents is proposed.

Morris sat down in a revolving chair, too crushed for comment, and drummed with a lead pencil on the desk.

"I wonder if he done up his intended father-in-law, too?" he said at length.

"No fear of that, Mawruss," Abe replied. He ain't no sucker like us, Mawruss. I bet you his father-in-law—what's his name—"

"The Advance Credit Clothing Company," Morris suggested.

"Sure," Abe went on. "I bet you this clothing concern says to him:

"If you want to marry my daughter, you gotter go into bankruptcy first. Then, when you're all cleaned up, I'll give you a couple of thousand dollars to start as a new beginner in another line. Ain't it?"

Morris nodded gloomily.

"No, Mawruss," Abe continued. "I bet you his father-in-law is a big crook like himself."

He rose to his feet and opened the large green and red covered book furnished by the commercial agency to which they subscribed.

"I'm going to do now, Mawruss, what you should have done before you sent that present," he said. "I'm going to look up this here Advance Credit Clothing Company. I bet you he ain't even in the book—what?"

Before Morris could reply, the letter-carrier entered with the morning mail. While Abe continued to run his thumb down the columns of the commercial agency book, Morris began to open the envelopes. Both their heads were bent over their tasks, when an exclamation arose simultaneously from each.

"Now, what d'ye think of that?" said Abe.

"Did y' ever see anything like it?"

Morris cried.

"What is it?" Abe asked.

For answer, Morris thrust a letter into his partner's hand. It was headed, "The Advance Credit Clothing Company—Marcus Bramson, Proprietor," and read as follows:

Messrs, Potash & Perlmutter,

Gents:

Your shipment of the 5th is to hand, and in reply would say that we are returning it via Blue Line on account Miss Tillie Bramson's engagement is broken. We understand that low-life H. Maimin got into you for six hundred and fifty dollars. Believe me, he done us for more than that. Our Mr. Bramson will be in New York shortly, and will call to look at your line. Hoping we will be able to do business with you,

Yours truly,

The Advance Credit Clothing Company,
Per T. B.

Abe Potash laid down the letter with a sigh, while his thumb still rested caressingly on the open page of the mercantile agency book.

"So he's going to send back the present!" he said. "That man Marcus Bramson, proprietor, has a big heart, Mawruss. He's a man with fine feelings and a fine disposition, Mawruss. He's got a fine rating, too, Mawruss—seventy-five to a hundred thousand, first credit!" He closed the book almost lovingly. "D'ye think they would give the money back for that present, Mawruss?"

"I don't know," said Morris. "Minnie bought it, and she told me it was a big bargain. It was a sale, she said, but I guess they'll take it back."

"What did it look like?" Abe said.

"I didn't see it," Morris replied. "They sent it direct from the store, but I took Minnie's word for it. She said it was fine value."

"And Minnie," Abe concluded, "is a fine, up-to-date woman!"

III.

Two days later, Abe Potash spotted the name of Marcus Bramson in the "Arrival of Buyers" column of a morning newspaper.

"Mawruss," he cried, "he's come!"

"Who's come?" Morris asked.

"Marcus Bramson," Abe replied, reaching for his hat. "I'm going over to the Bingler House now, to meet him. You wait here till I come back. I bet you we sell him a big bill of goods!"

As Abe went out of the store by the front door, an expressman bearing a square wooden box entered the rear alley. He brought the package straight to Miss Cohen, who signed a receipt and summoned Mr. Perlmutter. Morris proceeded to pry off the cover.

"This is something what Mrs. Perlmutter bought for Hyman Maimin."

min's wedding present," he explained. "I ain't never seen it yet." He pulled out a number of wads of tissue paper. When he finally reached a piece of silverware, he turned the box upside down and shook out the remainder of its contents upon a sample table.

"Oh, Mr. Perlmutter," Miss Cohen exclaimed, clasping her hands, "what a beautiful bonbon dish! What a lovely wedding present!"

Morris looked at the bonbon dish and beads of perspiration started on his forehead.

"Ain't Mrs. Perlmutter got good taste!" Miss Cohen went on enthusiastically.

Morris said nothing, but picked up the silver dish. Examining the polished center carefully, he discerned the indistinct initials "M. P." almost but not quite effaced by buffing. Undoubtedly it was the same bonbon dish.

He gathered up the tissue paper and carefully arranged it in the box as a bed for the silver dish. Then he put the cover on, and nailed it down.

"Ain't you going to let Mr. Potash see it?" Miss Cohen asked. "He ain't never seen it before, neither, has he?"

Morris frowned.

"I think he has," he replied. "Anyhow, I'm going to send it right uptown by messenger boy."

"Do you think they'll exchange it?" Miss Cohen inquired.

"Oh, I guess it will be put back in stock all right," said Morris, turning away.

IV.

The next morning, when Morris entered the store, Abe was busy figuring on the back of a torn envelope.

"Hello, Mawruss!" he cried, looking up. "Ain't it a beautiful weather?"

Morris agreed that it was.

"That Mr. Bramson," Abe went on, "that's one fine gentleman, Mawruss. He ain't what you'd call a close buyer, neither, Mawruss."

"No?" Morris commented.

"The way I figure it," Abe continued, "reckoning on what we lost by Hyman Maimin, if he settles for thirty cents, and what we make out of Mr. Bramson's first order, we come out even to the dollar!"

"So?" Morris murmured.

"All excepting that wedding present, Mawruss," said Abe. "By the way, Mawruss, ain't that wedding present come back yet?"

"Why, sure," said Morris. "It come back yesterday, when you were out."

"Why ain't you showed it to me? Ain't I got no right to see it, Mawruss?"

"Of course you got a right to see it," Morris assented, "but I thought I'd get it right uptown to Minnie and have it exchanged."

"And did she exchange it?" Abe asked.

"Well, it's like this," Morris explained. "Minnie liked it so well that she decided on keeping it, so I'll give the firm my personal check for twenty-five dollars."

Abe puffed hard on his cigar.

"You're a purty generous feller, Mawruss," he commented, "to give Sufferings of Roumanian Jews.

After the Nationalists' double failure to carry out pogroms on the Russian pattern in December last year, they took lessons of the more cunning Poles of Galicia, and they are now using this more "civilized" method of boycotting to annihilate the Jews, being certain that the officials will not interfere with them in their work. An appeal has been printed in Jassy and distributed broadcast calling on Roumanians of every class and age, including the scholars of the elementary and secondary schools, to boycott the Jews along the whole line. The Socialist movement was started by the Jews, the Jews are responsible for the poverty of the Roumanians, etc.

The following is a rather curious exhibition of Roumanian justice: Two peasants appeared before the court of Bucharest this February to answer for the robbery and murder of a Jewish commercial trader. Their defender, T. Florescu, member of the Roumanian Parliament, resorted to an effective and well known means of prejudicing the jury. He began his defence with the words: "1914 years ago the Jews murdered Christ. Now Christians have murdered a Jew." He then spoke of two hostile camps facing one another, on the one side the oppressing and profit-making Jews, who were now trying to revenge one of their number, on the other two tortured, simple-hearted peasants. Hereupon the jury declared the prisoners "not guilty," and the murderers were liberated to the rejoicing of the populace.

The Union of Native Jews have addressed an appeal to the Christian population of Roumania, in which they point out that, owing to special circumstances, some tens of thousands of Jews have been obliged to emigrate from the country, leaving the places vacated by them free to foreigners. They further point out that the Jews have shared in all the sorrows of the country, and have never been indifferent to its needs, and they appeal to Roumanian citizens to demand that when the constitution is revised the native Jews born and bred in the country should be recognized by the law as fellow-citizens.

Herman Alwardt, the noted German anti-Semite, died in Berlin last Friday. Many years ago he came to the United States and made an anti-Semitic lecture tour, but it proved a financial failure. The King of Italy recently received Professor Colombo, Dr. A. Sacerdoti and Signor Alatri as delegates of the Congress of Italian Young Jewry. The king questioned them on the congress and on the conditions of the Jewish communities in Italy. He displayed great interest in the state of the Russian Jews, whose position, he remarked, he knew was bad. The king expressed his regret at the fact that many civilized countries had closed their universities to the Russian Jews who were compelled to leave their country, and he assured the delegates that Italy would not follow their example, but that it would continue to show hospitality to Russo-Jewish students.

Misery, helplessness and untold hardship attending deportation from ports of entry of hundreds of immigrant families suspected of suffering from trachoma, touched a sympathetic chord and caused Russian scientists to register sharp criticism against those examining physicians whose superficial observations cannot be raised to scientific truth and who see trachoma where only a passing inflammation of the eyes exists.

At a recent convention of Russian oculists held in Moscow, after a lengthy discussion on the subject of what is aptly termed the "Trachoma Tragedy of the Emigrant," the following resolution was passed:

"In view of the fact that the oculists in the harbors and stations of control, in defining the nature and stages of the disease of the emigrants are not unfrequently guided by scientific data of insufficient competence and that, by detaining or debarring people afflicted with uncontagious diseases of the eye, the physicians cause unspeakable harm and suffering to the emigrants, the First Congress of Russian Oculists in Moscow expresses its regret at such an abnormal state of affairs and hopes to see it remedied in the nearest future."

Annual Meeting of the Downtown Talmud Torah.

Sunday evening, April 19, the annual meeting of the Downtown Talmud Torah was held in the building of the institution, 394-396 East Houston street. After the boys' choir had sung several Hebrew melodies, the president, Mr. William Fischman, read a report of the various activities of the institution during the past year, which indicated progress in every department. Particularly gratifying was the fact that the 665 boys and 540 girls who are attending school regularly have in the past year progressed remarkably in their studies. The Children's Synagogue plays an important part in the religious training of the children. The services, which are conducted every Friday evening and Saturday morning, as well as on all Jewish festivals, are very well-attended by both the pupils and the children of the neighborhood.

The president then enumerated the activities of the ladies' branch of the organization in providing shoes and clothing for the orphans and otherwise dependent children of the school; and of the junior auxiliary, the Friendly Torah Circle, which is also carrying on a lively activity for the institution, and concludes with an ardent appeal for the erection of a new building as a branch of the Downtown Talmud Torah.

Semel, who presented a set of resolutions engraved in silver in behalf of the directors and members to Mr. J. M. T. Dr. J. L. Magnes, Hon. Otto A. Rosalsky and Rabbi David Frankel also addressed the meeting. They praised the good work that was being accomplished by the Downtown Talmud Torah and appealed for its continuance and propagation.

A Place For Evil

By Archibald Ross

"I form the light, and create darkness; I make peace, and create evil; I, the Lord, do all these things."—Isaiah, 45:7.

No greater truth comes down
Through the long line of years
Than rapt Isaiah's God-given words
For those with eyes and ears.

Great truths demand their rights.
Vices, like venomous weeds,
Sprout all around earth's noblest souls
As goads to test their deeds.

Pride, envy, lust and hate
Crop out to serve their plan.
These moral termagants have power,
Nor will they yield to man.

Evils, like drastic drugs,
Are found near Virtue's breast.
Like passing storms, they serve an end,
With much peculiar zest.

Perplexing us, but then,
As in a mirror's face,
We learn by contrast, and go forth
To find our fittest place.

The march of care and pain,
The Niobes of tears,
Keep hidden in their depths some gain
To bloom in after years.

This law of friction pleads
The grandeur of the whole,
And shows legation in the deeds
That mark the wakened soul.

Each makes or mars himself,
Each makes his Heaven or hell.
O wondrous amplitude of mind
In human frames to dwell.

Yes, wondrous life. Yet while
You hope to do your best,
Strange forces march in serried file,
And strike you in the breast.

One trimmer gives his pledge
To pay your every bill
If you but think within his hedge,
And stultify your will.

Some, pregnant with salaam,
Win your esteem at once,
Then quickly join their baser crew,
And call you fool and dunce.

Some halls of learning rise
To please sleek millionaires,
Who suavely veil professors' eyes,
And mesmerize the players.

Thus, reader, your career
On earth is strangely blest.
Doubt comes and whispers in your ear,
And long remains your guest.

While sectaries gather round,
With scorn, and threat, and shout,
And leave you wounded on the ground
For nursing honest doubt.

But have no fear, dear friend.
The empire of the mind
Embraces in its highest trend
Diversities in kind.

Search well the depths within,
The Infinite is there.
Great storms will greet us ere we win
The robes we long to wear.

In life work have an aim.
Seek studies that will build.
In nervous, terse, and lucid style
The Bible proves the guild.

Besides its moral tone,
Its fresh and sparkling wells,
The portraiture is there so rich,
The painting so excels.

Here we must drop conceit,
And act as honest men.
What best endears our pilgrimage
Is best in thought and pen.

Some Interesting Excerpts From Frederic Harrison's Autobiographical Memoirs.

I.

We warmly repudiate the arid conceit of atheism; and even agnosticism seems to us but a barren negation of which we need not be proud. Without presuming to dogmatize on the origin of the universe or the purposes of the Creator, we find what visible signs of Providence we can recognize in the vast and gradual evolution of human civilization, in the almost miraculous dominion over his earthly home that man has won, and the even more marvelous regeneration of his own nature from primeval brutality and ignorance. If the moral guidance of our world means anything, it means this. It fills us with reverence as it is, even though we know not whence it came nor whither it may lead.

When I was in Paris I took care to see the wonderful correspondent of the Times, Monsieur de Blowitz, (2) whose audacity, cleverness and imaginative powers were even more surprising in real life than they were in the press or in his thrilling Memoirs. In his own line he was a consummate workman, though he often irritated the sterner politicians, and drew down the cruel mot of Gambetta: "Il a tous les vices—il est Juif, Bohémé, Catholique, et de core." He assisted me most loyally when I acted as "Times correspondent in the French provinces" during the marshalate, and he introduced me to the Royalist Prefect of the Gironde, begging him to give me every means of studying the great contest, and addressing his excellency, Monsieur de Tracy, as "mon cher et sympathique ennemie." He was a hearty friend and a brilliant journalist.

Disraeli was more effective in the House [of Commons] than on a platform, to an audience of trained politicians than to a miscellaneous body; for his manner was eminently that of the House, conventional and in-elegant, and his force lay in brilliant sarcasm and memorable epigram.

No memory of mine is more vivid than the curious contrast between Disraeli and Gladstone, whether in their public utterances or in private life. . . . Disraeli was the resonant critic who delighted them [his hearers] with satire, eloquence, and imaginative pictures of a great future or an impending peril.

Disraeli was—or affected to be—in private life the inscrutable sphinx that he so often chose to appear in public. Though I occasionally met him in society, I never spoke to him or even heard him speak there. I have seen him in mixed assemblies, surrounded by men and women of different parties, but he never seemed to utter more than orinary monosyllables and conventional phrases. As Lord Beaconsfield in a crowded room he would stand like a dumb oracle or an unfathomable potentate whose decrees could not be gainsaid or foreseen. I traveled with him once for an hour in the same carriage in a railway train, Mrs. Disraeli talking incessantly, but the statesman never uttered one single articulate sentence, though it was obvious that the only hearers were two Oxford students. I remember that at a big garden party on Campden Hill there was a "Punch and Judy" set up on the lower lawn to amuse the children. There stood Gladstone, laughing and open-mouthed, as delighted as any girl or boy of them all. Opposite to him were Disraeli and Montagu Corry, to whom the creator of "Peace with Honor" seemed, by his look of contempt, to be saying, "They call this a statesman." (3)

(2) It is generally acknowledged that Blowitz is the king of newspaper correspondents. His career was not the less interesting because of his Jewish descent.

An amusing scene took place in my chambers over a legal dispute about a patent right. Le Moussu, a mechanical draughtsman and an engraver of remarkable skill, claimed to have been the real inventor of a new copying machine. Karl Marx, the Socialist author, had advanced money on it, and claimed to have it assigned to him. They were about to try the matter in the law courts when they mutually agreed to refer the case to arbitration, choosing me as judge. This I consented to do if the regular forms of arbitration under the then law were observed. They attended in my chambers to argue their respective claims. . . . Before they gave evidence I required them in due form to be sworn on the Bible, as the law then required for legal testimony. This filled them both with horror. Karl Marx protested that he would never so degrade himself. Le Moussu said that no man should ever accuse him of such an act of meanness. For half an hour they argued and protested, each refusing to be sworn first in presence of the other. At last I obtained a compromise, that the witnesses should simultaneously "touch the book" without uttering a word. Both seemed to me to shrink from the pollution of handling the sacred volume, much as Mephistopheles in the opera shrinks from the cross. When they got to argue the case the ingenious Le Moussu won, for Karl Marx floundered about in utter confusion.

British Views of Bible Translations—Seventieth Birthday of Hermann Landau—Dr. Emanuel Lasker in Russia—An Italian Contrast—Lord Reading and the Anglo-Jewish Association—The Chief Rabbi's Residence Again.

London, April 9, 1914.

Considerable interest has been aroused here about the completion of the American Jewish translation into English of the Bible, appearing under the auspices of the Jewish Publication Society of America. One writer going into history points out that Jewish translations of the Bible into other languages than Hebrew date back a long way. Shortly after the time of Ezra Aramaic took the place of Hebrew as the vernacular of the Jews, and there are traces of an early practice of translating the Bible into this vernacular. The existing Aramaic versions (Targumim) of the various books of the Bible were done at varying dates, all considerably later than Ezra. The oldest of all Jewish translations is the Septuagint, into Greek, which was begun, probably in the third century before the present era, and went through repeated revisions at the hands of Jewish scholars. Saadia did the Bible into Arabic in the tenth century, and the first Yiddish rendering dates back to the fifteenth century. The Yiddish translation is much used by women; it is paraphrase and commentary stuffed with legendary lore, rather than a translation. Of modern versions the most famous and most significant is Mendelssohn's rendering of the Pentateuch. It is unique because its object was not to make the Hebrew more intelligible, but to teach German Jews German and to drive out Yiddish. It is a landmark, by no means all for good, in the latter-day history of Jewish thought.

The attitude of the community toward translations from the Bible has varied from time to time. It was only under pressure of Jewish ignorance of Hebrew that the rabbis permitted translations, and they have usually drawn a distinction between specifically Jewish tongues, like Aramaic and Yiddish, and non-Jewish tongues. Two legends as to the Septuagint illustrate the problem represented by a translation into Greek. It is said that each of the translators of the Septuagint was shut off apart from the others, and when all had finished the rendering of each was found to be identical with that of all the others. In other words, only a miracle could secure a faithful rendering. The other legend says that when the Septuagint was finished Palestine rocked on its base, a legend fortified by another to the effect that the day on which the law was translated into Greek was as fatal as the day on which the Golden Calf was made. In other words, a translation by making ignorance of Hebrew easy undermines Judaism. The history of the Mendelssohnian rendering justifies this fear. Perhaps it may be said that the new American translation is already something of an anachronism. The tendency of modern Judaism of the living species is to revive Hebrew as a living tongue, spoken, written and read by all Jews, and to deepen the interest in Hebrew literature; in other words, to make a translation into English or any other tongue unnecessary.

Hermann Landau, one of the leading philanthropists of Anglo-Jewry, celebrated his seventieth birthday on April 3, an anniversary which almost synchronizes with the jubilee of his settlement in this country. From far and wide have come congratulations to him and they have been as sincere as they were widespread. Mr. Landau is not an Englishman born; he was an alien immigrant and he is proud to describe himself as a Polish Jew, a "nom de plume" which, until it no longer concealed his identity, he used to adopt in order to cover many of his benefactions. He is, in himself, evidence of the value which alien immigration is to this country. He has made more than one fortune, but he has also given fortunes in charity in England. His sympathies are so wide as to know no visible limits, but it is to his own people, the refugees from Russian persecution, that his heart and his hand are the most widely open. In Anglo-Jewry he is most identified with those institutions that assist the wayfarer and the wanderer from their lands. In him is symbolized the Jews' Temporary Shelter, of which he is president and founder.

The announcement that Dr. Emanuel Lasker, the eminent Jewish chess champion, who is at present in Russia, where he is giving exhibitions of his science, has been admitted to that country only on sufferance and is permitted to remain there only so long as he confines his activities to his chess exhibitions, serves to recall attention to the attitude adopted by the Russian Government towards foreign Jews. Dr. Lasker has fared better than most of his co-religionists, and the chess master by being admitted has received an exceptional favor. It is not long since the great Danish man of letters, Dr. Georg Brandes, was, on account not of his religion, but of his race, refused permission to lecture in St. Petersburg. Still earlier it was reported that Herbert Samuel, the British Postmaster-General, and Mr. Oscar Straus, formerly American Ambassador at Constantinople, were refused the "visé" of the Russian consuls when they expressed their desire to visit the Russian dominions. It is surprising that foreign governments should accept these insults without protest—the Government of the United States is the only one that has taken any action in the matter—for an insult to a distinguished citizen is assuredly an insult to the nation of which he is an ornament. There may be probably are—political reasons for such inaction. The same cannot, however, be said for the organizers of international congresses, at least two of which, at meetings in London last year, resolved to meet on the next occasion in St. Petersburg, unconscious or heedless that they were thereby preventing their Jewish colleagues from continuing their participation in the meetings.

In strong contrast with the scandalous and savage treatment of Jews in Russia stands the Italian example. I note that the Italian monarch has recently given an audience to Professor Colombo, Dr. A. Sacerdoti and Signor Alatri as delegates of the Congress of Italian Young Jewry. The king questioned them on the congress and on the condition of the Jewish communities in Italy. He displayed great interest in the state of the Russian Jews, whose position, he remarked, he knew was bad. The King expressed his regret at the fact that many civilized countries had closed their universities to the Russian Jews who were compelled to leave their country, and he assured the delegates that Italy would not follow their example, but that it would continue to show hospitality to Russo-Jewish students. Speaking of the Jews in Tripoli, the King regretted the recent assaults on them and stated that he recognized the good qualities of the Jews, and that he was anxious to protect his new Jewish subjects in Africa and ensure for them the same measure of liberty and equality as was enjoyed for so many years by his Italian Jewish subjects.

The Council of the Anglo-Jewish Association on April 4 elected Lord Reading a vice-president. The president of the association said that Lord Reading was taking interest in the affairs of the Jewish community, and had indicated that he was willing to co-operate in the work of the association. Another speaker said that the position of vice-president was once before occupied by a distinguished Jewish jurist—Sir George Jessel.

The question of the Chief Rabbi's official residence is still unsettled. It appears now that what was taken to be an edict establishing Court Lodge in the East End as his official center was misinterpreted. The much-discussed decision simply fixed that house as a place where Dr. Hertz could stay when temporarily visiting the East End.

The Ottoman authorities have decided to build two new roads in Palestine. The first is the Jaffa-Nablus road, one of the imperial highways. The first part, which lies north in the mountains, comprises the stretch Tulkerim-Nablus, was originally well made and is still in fairly good condition, whereas the second half, which runs into the plains below Jaffa, has disappeared from the face of the earth for many years. Some parts can still be recognized as having belonged to a road, but cannot be used for traffic, and are conspicuous by having a growth of weed one foot high.

In order to insure the insertion of communications in the current issue of THE HEBREW STANDARD they must be in this office not later than Wednesday 10 a. m. of the week in which they are to appear.

We take pleasure in announcing that we have consummated arrangements whereby we are now in the position to print in our columns several of the famous "Potash & Perlmutter" stories by Montague Glass. The first of these appears in another part of the present issue and others will follow from time to time. None of these tales has ever appeared in the columns of The Saturday Evening Post of Philadelphia, the medium in which most, if not all, of the original stories of this genre first became known to the reading public. We feel certain that our own readers will greatly enjoy the stories by this noted writer, which we have been able to secure for them.

There are men who have a sense of duty who haven't sense enough to do their duty.

Let the preacher preach to please his hearers—remembering always that God is one of the hearers.

If the Old Testament is a Jewish book, does that fact alone make the United States a Christian country?

Joyful tidings are conveyed by the Key West (Fla.) Citizen which informs its readers that "The Hebrew Political Association is for Malone and Fogarty."

The report of the Jewish Agricultural and Industrial Aid Society for 1913 makes interesting reading and follows along the lines laid down by its predecessors. We find nothing therein which seems to us to call for special comment.

Our Baltimore contemporary seems disposed to qualify for the post of official organ to the American Jewish Committee. Taking our contemporary's word for it that the committee has made "little noise in public," we think that with the invaluable assistance offered from Baltimore the committee can in future fire shots to be heard round the world.

Madame Adelina Patti, the great diva, is said to be a great admirer of the Jews, and to evidence her admiration constantly wears no less than a mezusah on her person. We do not quite understand the significance or appropriateness of this personal adornment, and can only hope that the diva has not taken to it from a wish to exploit the Jews from the sordid side of her sacred art.

Dennis Isaacs, a nephew of Lord Chief Justice Reading of England, recently fought a duel with the rapier in Germany. His opponent was a German swordsman of no mean ability, but our English co-religionist was the better man. So young Isaacs added a new title of his house to fame! And yet what sort of a show had Dennis in this case? He won, and his name is Dennis. If he had lost, his name surely were Dennis; The best thing Dennis can do, if he tries the sword again, is to change his name.

Dr. Laidlaw finds that the Jewish population of New York has grown much faster in the last decade than either the Catholic or the Protestant element. This finding ought to bring home to Jews a sobering sense of their power and influence for good in our civic life. We do not make appropriate and sufficient use of our influence and responsibility and should in the light of the publication of these facts, not hesitate to do so.

One notes that Arthur James Balfour, leader of the Opposition in the British House of Commons, has ascended the lecture platform at the universities and returned to his early love, metaphysical exposition, in his series of Gifford addresses. Mr. Balfour always occupied a unique position because of his ability happily to combine a love of speculative study with a strong knack for practical politics. How many Jewish politicians are like him in this respect in England? We should not dare to think of our own country in this connection.

THE MENORAH MOVEMENT

A NEAT book, bearing the above title, has just come to our desk. It purports to describe the history and activities of the Intercollegiate Menorah Association, a union of students at various universities and other institutions of learning in this country, interested in the study and advancement of Jewish culture and ideals. We have from time to time discussed the Menorah movement in these columns and have commented on various events in the life of this organization, as these have taken place. This book epitomizes the work that has been done at the different branch Menorah societies, besides containing a full account of the recent constituent convention and the dinner at the Hotel Astor, which was a part of it.

The Menorah has ambitious plans for its development, and these are fully set forth in the pages of the book. Besides more or less desultory lectures on matters of Jewish interest, which it already has, it is proposed to have founded Menorah chairs in Jewish literature and culture, libraries and prizes, and to have issued syllabi, pamphlets and classics, and The Menorah Journal. All of these objects will be steadily pursued, although some may not be realized until the distant future. But The Menorah Journal promises to eventuate before this year has run its course, and will make an interesting and important addition to Jewish periodical literature in English in the United States. The Journal will publish not only news of the movement which it is designed to further, but literary articles by writers of worth and standing as well. The initial number is to appear next October and the further issues will be bi-monthly. The Jewish community should give its unqualified support to this venture.

Rabbis, even if young men and burning with the zeal to speak modern words of prophetic wisdom to the nations, must always remember that such a situation as is presented in the phrase res augustae domi exists. It is dangerous to prophecy even if one is a graduate of the Cincinnati forcing-house for latter-day Amoses, Hoseas and Malachis. Especially is it an ungrateful task for the rabbinical prophet in the United States, in the year of the common reckoning 1914, to attempt to revise the views and prejudices of many people in the light of his superior knowledge. He may well be right, absolutely right, in his strictures, but he should remember that minding one's business is a good rule for a young man, even if a rabbi, to follow. The only rabbis who can attack social abuses of the day are those with institutional synagogues—they have more institution than synagogue back of them.

If to interest oneself in the management of the public schools of a locality, makes one an agitator, then the Jewish citizens of Mt. Holly, N. J., deserve the implied criticism which The News of that town directs at them. We think that a man has a perfect right to be interested in the management of the public schools of his place of residence, and this, far from making him out to be an agitator, shows that he is a good citizen who takes a vital interest in municipal affairs. If, indeed, there are Jewish truant officers of Mt. Holly who are not citizens and are unable to comprehend English, as The News intimates, then their appointment to such a post was an unqualified mistake. But we think the shoe is on the other foot, in this instance.

In London, curiously enough, they are now just waking up to the fact that an appropriate way of commemorating immediately deceased friends is to give a donation to one or more communal charities in lieu of sending flowers to the obsequies. Some years ago the United Hebrew Charities advanced this suggestion to the members of the local community, and while it has not had the success and the wide currency its true spirit of Zedokoh should have won for it, New York can never permit London to look upon this form of mortuary memorial as unusual, as never heard of until 1914! Why cannot we, on the other hand, make the practice universal? It has much to commend it!

"Leach Cross" is to be envied! He made an income tax return covering the $28,000 he earned during the last ten months of 1913 as a—"pug," while there are ever so many Jewish lawyers, doctors and dentists, not to mention those Jews in other professions, who are glad if they can earn $28,000 in ten years! "Leach" is a dentist under his real name of Louis Wallach, but it is safe to say that his vast earnings did not flow from the molars he extracted from unwilling patients, but rather from the chances he himself took of having his molars "put out of business" every time "he put up his 'dukes.'"

The Rev. Francis H. Rowley, of Boston, a bigoted and implacable enemy of shechitah, is again at work in his efforts to discredit the Jewish methods of slaughtering before the bar of American public opinion. He grounds his opposition to shechitah upon its fancied inhumane character, when in truth the very reverse is the case. Here is an opportunity for The Jewish Advocate to perform a real, constructive service to the local Jewry. Such a service demands some intensive labor, which is not required in the reprinting (without credit) of translations from the Yiddish.

THE ESSENCE OF GREATNESS

גור שמה אכר שמה :

"A name made great is a name destroyed." (Ethics of the Fathers, I, 14.)

OUR calendar has again brought us around to that storehouse of homely wisdom, the Ethics of the Fathers. The saying which forms our text is precious because of its epigrammatic terseness, because of its consistency with the character of its author Hillel, whose humility is proverbial, and because of its practical helpfulness. We need to be told now and again what is truly great and what is not. The crowded agora of life teems with both those whose greatness is an inheritance from above, and those who cleverly counterfeit greatness and cry their wares aloud. Since from time immemorial the strident call of the charlatan has succeeded in drowning the subdued voice of the wise, Hillel's warning has not lost anything in point of timeliness.

There is a widespread notion that a great man is made by a great occasion. Comes a dramatic event in the life of men and nations and forthwith some man rises, as the saying goes, to the occasion and wins ringing fame. But Hillel says, "a name made great is a name destroyed." A man who is made by Occasion is unmade by Occasion. A man who is suddenly lifted up on the shoulders of the people and carried about in triumphal procession, is apt to find himself thrown into the dust with none so poor to do him reverence. The trough that yawns beneath the highcrested wave of popularity is frightfully abysmal. He who courts the rewards of popularity must risk its compensatory perils.

None would deny the part occasion plays in the making of great men. But we deny it creative power; we would not admit that it makes great men. A simple illustration may be found in the present season. Look about you and behold the glories of springtime. Buds burst their husks; blades push the clod aside to climb towards the light. Spring is the most dramatic event in nature, and it shocks all things into new life. But it can only do so because the vital stir is present in plant and seed, waiting for the opportune moment to be impelled into fulness of power. The magic wand of Spring has no effect upon a dead tree. Similarly men may be dormant until some glorious springtide event, of national or individual significance, shocks them into new life and new power. Then greatness buds and blossoms. But unless the sap of greatness courses latently in the veins of a man, unless the essence of greatness slumbers in his soul, occasions may come and occasions may go, and—be they never so volcanic—they will not turn a clodhopper into a paragon of excellence.

The essence of greatness lies in the idea, the ruling passion, which animates a man and provides him with a spring of action. A man cannot be great apart from the truth he seeks to enforce. Is his idea great? then he is great. Not otherwise.

Again, let it be remembered that great ideas are not necessarily brilliant, requiring dazzling intellectual acumen for their comprehension. Great ideas are usually very simple—so simple that a child can understand them; for simplicity is part of the essence of greatness. Not of course the simplicity of the dullard, but the sublime, lucid simplicity of the stars in their eternal courses. The human race moves by devious ways; it has—as the Preacher says—sought out for itself many inventions; but "God made man simple;" and in the end of time when the sum of human achievements is taken it will be found that what will really be put to our credit will not be the many brilliant inventions, the multitudinous splendid feats in war, statecraft or art, but just a few simple thoughts about right thinking and right living, about God and man. These ideals will be reckoned the sole fruit of our labor, the flowers of myriad Springdays, the harvest of myriad summers, the vintage of myriad autumns! The rabbis say that when God will sit in judgment upon the nations, He will ask them: What have ye accomplished? The Romans will say, We have built many public places and erected many public baths; the Persians will say, We have built many bridges and conquered many cities; but Israel will simply say, We have kept the Torah. The nations, ludicrously confident in their flashy deeds, will be discomfited; while Israel, holding in its hands nothing tangible, will be crowned with glory as representing the true achievement of mankind.

Since greatness does not consist of intellectual force it lies, in the last analysis, in moral force. The ideas that make for greatness being so simple that their comprehension furnishes no criterion of human excellency, this criterion must be found in the passionate clinging to these ideas that has always been an outstanding feature of great lives. It must be found in the intimate relation which the great man bears to his great idea. The average man, though fully comprehending the great simplicities of human life and thought, to a degree; glimpsing their starlike sublimity, yet cannot get himself to be intimately identified with them. Between him and them there is a wall of separation. He is one thing and they are something else, something apart. Not so the great man. He and his truth are one and the same. There is not even the thinnest partition between them. It is not merely that Truth lives in him, but that he lives the Truth. For the great man is endowed with the direct vision of truth. He sees God, as it is said Moses did, "face to face." He is Truth. For a great man is nothing more nor less than a great idea become flesh. The fleshening of a great idea may be helped by a great occasion, but it is quite independent of it. It is also independent of blustering fame. It publishes itself. It is the greatest event in the universe. It is the miracle of miracles.

Our Boston contemporary, The Jewish Advocate, with its truly encyclopaedic "wisdom" headlines that "First Jewish Assistant United States Treasurer Inducted," implying thereby that Mr. Charles B. Strecker, of "the Hub," is the first Jew on whom this honor was conferred. Wake up! Martin Vogel has held the same office in New York for a year by now, and, many decades ago Julius Jacobs occupied the identical post at San Francisco for a considerable period.

We think the Young Men's Hebrew Association of Asbury Park, in protesting against the ineligibility of Jews to hold office in the local governmental affairs of the neighboring Ocean Grove, has followed a false scent. The president of the Ocean Grove Camp Meeting Association, Dr. Ballard, disclaims, and we think convincingly, all thoughts of race prejudice, but points out that Ocean Grove, N. J., was founded and is maintained as a Christian institution, for just what it is, a rallying ground for evangelistic camp meetings. With such matters Jews can and should have nothing whatever to do. Would the Young Men's Hebrew Association, for example, wish to have Christians elected to the active internal management of the affairs of Petach Tikvah or Rischon le-Zion or Mercaz in Palestine? We think not! We advise our young friends of Asbury Park to let Ocean Grove and its affairs alone, and, if they must find a vent for their Jewish activity, to seek to direct this along other lines.

"WAR"

Whether there will be war or not, the martial spirit seems to be abounding in the air. With the two-inch and three-inch headlines in the daily press, retailing the latest moves on the border-lines, and the "Oxtree, Oxtree," of the newsboys, it seems we are at war already.

* * *

Add to this the preparations of the army, the navy, the national guard and the naval militia and Congress giving plenary powers to the President, no one can truly foretell what a day will bring forth.

Then the recruiting stations of the United States army are busy; recruits are coming forth in great numbers, more than were expected; all this at least portends coming hostilities.

The orchestras in the theatres between the acts are playing the "Star Spangled Banner," and the audience thrilled with a patriotic fervor, joins in singing our great national anthem; and in the movies everywhere the American Flag is thrown upon the screen at short intervals and the cheers of the auditors evince a loyalty and patriotic feeling which makes the heart swell in sympathy and pride for "Old Glory."

It is to be hoped that war and its concomitant horrors will be avoided, but if it must come, our people will stand prepared and "the 'Star Spangled Banner,' oh, long may it wave o'er the land of the Free and the Home of the brave," and one is now strongly reminded of the order of Gen. Dix at the beginning of the War of the Rebellion, which read: "If any one dares to pull down the American flag shoot him on the spot," and this comprehends an insult to it. So mote it be.

TABLE TALK

Stephenson's invention of railways brought in its train numerous accidents which resulted in much loss of human life, and as the government failed to enact protective laws the cynical Sydney Smith, who, by the way, was a clergyman of the Church of England, declared in print that: "Not until a Bishop is killed by a railway accident will the government take action." Sydney Smith knew human nature, and what he said about English legislators may also be said of American legislators. It is therefore possible to hope that the two sensational occurrences, in the Empire State, last week will cause legislators at Albany to take into serious consideration the question of what shall be done in future with the unmoral and the criminal insane. There are those in the community who raise side issues in connection with the quadruple execution at Sing Sing and the attempted assassination of the Mayor and the wounding of Mr. Polk. Our good friend, Mr. Jacob de Haas, the Boston humanitarian, for instance, deplors the "mawkish sentiment which is not at all a part of the Jewish character" that "was played upon to the full—perhaps in the interest of the dead—a good deal, apparently, in the interest of some well advertised individuals, and not a little of it in the interest of newspapers to whom blood is circulation.

"To the combination of interests, and the frank imitation of Christian methods, the public has been regaled with a story of a Passover service in the death house, together with a last message to the East Side boys written, dictated, but most likely indited for one of the electrocuted men. The message is not Jewish in spirit, although it mentions the "Shool." It is a frank imitation of the typical gallows message that has done duty for almost a century. * * * All this business is wholly un-Jewish, either as religion, ethics or morals. The penitent is welcome enough in Israel, but he must prove his penitence by works, not by creed repetition and the like. * * * If we cannot prevent a Jew committing crime, at least let Jewish spiritual guides prevent the publication of canting messages from the death house." The sincerity of the admonition is obvious, but it does not touch the main issue. There is no particular harm done in the adaptation of Christian methods by Jewish spiritual guides. Indeed, it would be well if Jewish teachers of religion were to adapt the entire methods of the Catholic Church, a system which gives such a remarkable control to the clergy over the heart and conscience of those who once came under the influence of their teaching method during childhood. Just consider the behavior of the Catholic boy from the time he was taken in hand by the priest, and compare it with the attitude of the three Jewish boys who told the chaplain, bluntly, that "they had not any use for his ministrations if he could not help them in their trouble"—or words to that effect, which were duly recorded in the newspapers.

The public, and more particularly the Jewish community of New York, ought to be grateful to the newspapers for recording every word uttered in the Sing Sing death house. Every line published in the newspapers should be studied carefully by Jewish educationalists in order to discover what was wrong in the upbringing of the three Jewish boys, who unquestionably were totally devoid of the religious instinct. The first rebuff to their spiritual adviser indicated that they entertained materialistic ideas about human destiny, and right up till the last moment they showed not any fear of death. The harrowing details which have been published in the newspapers afford food for very serious thought which ought to teach a useful lesson to the greatest Jewish community that ever existed since the beginnings of history. All we know now about the tragedy of last week shows us what a serious danger is threatening the community.

"Alles schon dagewesen," says the sage in Uriel Acosta. Two thousand years ago the wealthy Jews of Alexandria pinned their faith to Philo and the Arabarch Alexander as defenders against the calumnies of Molo and Apion—the Pobiedonostof and the Houston Chamberlain of that period. There are even now in training quite a number of budding Houston Chamberlains amongst the newspaper reporters of the New York press, who are already willing to wound, although they are as yet afraid to strike at the character of the Jewish community. When the unfortunate Michael Mahoney fired a shot into the Mayor's party, outside the City Hall, the first editions of most of the evening newspapers announced that the assassin was a Jew! Why?

Capital Punishment.

As expected, Dr. Stephen S. Wise has declared his aversion to capital punishment. Speaking at the Free Synagogue in Carnegie Hall last Sunday, Dr. Wise used some very strong expressions of disapproval. He called the execution of the four boys at Sing Sing "a barbarous illustration of the working out of a system that is wholly wrong," and described capital punishment as "a morally indefensible form of murder." Strong language, indeed! No doubt capital punishment is wholly wrong, but the writer may be permitted to dissent from some of the reasons given by Dr. Wise why the death penalty should be abolished. In the first place, an execution has very little deterrent influence on immature minds—boys whose religious education has been neglected. Imprisonment for life, which removes an evildoer from his environment without any sensational stories about his exit appearing in the newspapers, is by far the severest punishment that a wild human being can experience, and it also acts as a powerful deterrent on his associates and admirers, whose thoughts cannot but turn occasionally to the contemplation of what a "lifer" suffers. Then, again, the feelings of parents, brothers, sisters and other relatives ought to be taken into consideration. It requires very little imagination to picture the agony which relatives are suffering for many years after the law has taken its remorseless toll. These are a few of the reasons why humanitarians are advocating the abolition of capital punishment. The events of the last few weeks, moreover, have demonstrated to the fullest extent what an abnormal scope there is offered by the present system for those who revel in harrowing the feelings of relatives and in nauseating newspaper readers with descriptions of the most disgusting details of an execution by the up-to-date method of electrocution.

MAURICE BRODZKY.

THE ORTHODOX JEW

The Orthodox Jew of family gives vent to his uppermost thoughts and aspirations when he repeats, "My son, how will he turn out." To all devoted parents, this carries with it the hope of good health, ability to make his way among men, and a clean, strong character. To the Orthodox among our people, there is also the hope; more particularly that the young boy holding so large a place in the heart of his parents, may be such a Jew as will reflect credit not only to himself and his parents, but to all his people. The hopes which the Jewish parent holds out to his son—robust health, self-reliance, lofty Jewish ideals—these tell the reason for the formation of THE RETREAT at Brookhaven, N. Y.

This camp was formed at the instigation of observant Jews, and is indorsed by the city's leading Orthodox rabbis, whose names we shall be glad to give upon application.

This camp does not merely offer the ordinary summer camp advantages, but, in addition, will be maintained as an ideal home, offering to boys from nine to fifteen the following features:

(1) A strictly Kosher cuisine of highest standard under the supervision of a Mashgiach.

(2) Medical care and observation of the boys in charge. There will be a resident physician who will conduct medical examinations of each boy at regular intervals and suggest what sports will best tend to afford his physical development. Each camper will take with him at the end of his ten weeks' stay a complete diary of his physical condition and needs.

(3) Moral and spiritual guidance. The staff will be composed of leaders of splendid character and strong religious convictions, whose advice and example will be an inspiration to the children in their charge. All of the leaders are college graduates and a number of them are engaged during the winter as teachers in the elementary and high schools. Should the parents so desire, instruction will be given in religious and secular subjects.

(4) Sabbath observance. The activities on the Sabbath will be modified with a due regard for proper observance of the day.

(5) Grounds. The house and tents are situated on spacious grounds, with a large private water front. The main house consists of a building of seventeen rooms, with all modern improvements. There is a large sun parlor, music room, a well-chosen library and a room for social gatherings and divine services. There are also a number of tents maintained in a healthful and sanitary manner.

(6) Athletics. There is a large baseball ground, tennis court, grounds for scouting and opportunities for all open air sports. There is both fresh and salt water bathing, rowing and fishing and all conducted under the supervision of an experienced corps of athletic instructors.

(7) Accessibility. THE RETREAT is situated only one hour and forty minutes from the Pennsylvania Depot. There are sixteen trains each day. Facilities are offered for the housing of transient parents and friends of the young campers.

The camp season is for a period of ten weeks, beginning July 1 and ending September 9. The number of campers is limited to a maximum of thirty, thereby assuring for each boy practically individual care and attention.

We shall be glad to furnish you upon application, with more detailed information, plans, terms, etc., and should you desire it we shall be glad to have you inspect THE RETREAT.

A Great Philanthropy.

"To move to the new place took us only three hours, but to get everything running like well oiled machinery, that was quite a different story."

The speaker was Dr. Siegfried Wachsmann, medical director of the Montefiore Home for Chronic Invalids, and he was telling an inquirer how the largest Jewish hospital in the world and unique among institutions of its kind in the country had passed through the first few months of its existence in its new $2,000,000 home at Gun Hill road, the Bronx.

"It took considerable time, energy and experience before the different departments began working together smoothly," he said, "and the number of our inmates was increasing all the time. When we came here we had 200 patients. Now we have 420 and before the end of the month arrives the Montefiore Home will have 450 patients which means that it will be full to capacity. Including the employees, there are 700 people residing in this institution, and with the numerous visitors and trades people continually going in and out the place amounts to a real lively village.

"The past winter, which was so unusually fierce, was the best possible test of the quality that went into the construction of the buildings. We are glad to say that the test proved highly satisfactory. One of the greatest fears was entertained was that distance of the Montefiore Home from the city might prove too great, but in spite of the delay in subway construction the directors, the ladies' auxiliary society, the attending medical staff and the patients' visitors came to the home with a remarkable regularity and neither blizzard nor cold seemed to cut us off from the outer world."

Dr. Wachsmann says "outer world" with a smile, but in reality does not think it will be very long before Gun Hill road and 210th street will be as closely populated as other parts of the city. In that event, however, the nine buildings comprising the Montefiore Home cannot be deprived of sunlight and air by buildings crowding about, as was the case with the former building at 138th street. For on all sides of the home space ample to insure light and air has been set aside in the form of a park to prevent any one building too close to the institution.

With the arrival of spring, the patients have begun to enjoy and appreciate the splendid facilities the institution offers for outdoor life. The various porches, roof gardens and garden walks in which the place abounds are put to good use by the invalids.

"The features of the home as a special hospital stand out more clearly than ever," said Dr. Wachsmann. "It has been said many times that this institution is unique in that respect. The usual 'home' is nothing more or less than a shelter, and nothing is done in the way of attempting to cure cases. The Montefiore Home always attempts to cure. Our policy is that we do not recognize the expression 'incurable.' We treat each person as if he or she had just as good chances for recovery as the next one. We cure patients here sometimes who couldn't be cured outside because a general hospital has not the facilities and the time for such work. The tuberculosis department, especially, is more than the usual shelter for advanced consumptives. Those cases suitable for sanitarium treatment are sent to the Montefiore Home sanitarium at Bedford Hills, N. Y. The others are treated here, and as they get stronger they are transferred out there.

"Naturally, increased facilities such as this institution possesses now require more financial support. In the old place the running expenses were $200,000 a year and they will certainly be $100,000 a year more in the new. There is no other hospital in the United States that gives hospital treatment to all kinds of chronic diseases. A great many people, however, have a mistaken notion of Montefiore Home, thinking it is merely a home for the aged. They would be surprised to see that even children are brought here for treatment."

Montefiore Home has been an institution for charity patients for thirty years, during which time it had grown in accommodations from a capacity of thirty beds to a total capacity of 630, which includes the accommodations in the sanitarium at Bedford Hills.

Next year, for the first time, there will be a private pavilion. The building of it will commence toward the end of the coming summer, and the funds for its erection have already been paid in. Jacob H. Schiff, Samuel Sachs, S. Guggenheim and Ferdinand Sulzberger each contributed $50,000.—N. Y. Evening Sun.

Dr. Max Nordau's Speech.

Editor HEBREW STANDARD:
In No. 14 of the "Welt," of April 3, this year, a report was given of a speech made by Dr. Nordau at a meeting in Paris on the 19th of March, and in which inter alia he is said to have expressed himself on the state of the Co-operative Settlement Society in Merchawja as follows: "At the Hamburg congress the cry was: 'the Co-operative Settlement Society.' The enthusiasm was enormous. After Oppenheimer's paper, 100,000 francs, the sum which was declared to be necessary, were given, on paper. Afterwards, to be sure, only 25,000 francs were paid in. Then an energetic propaganda work was undertaken, one worked and worked to raise the necessary sum. For two years one was at work in this way and announced great success when first 80,000, then 100,000, and finally 125,000 francs had been collected. The money was spent, as was proper, and we hear first, that the Co-operative Settlement Society worked and then—we hear nothing more. The official reports have become quiet. What we hear otherwise is little encouraging. The undertaking is a failure. We are given the answer: It had to be undertaken; had it been successful, the foundations would have been assured for a colonization on a broad basis. We have had no success, but had the illusion to work. Our sacrifices are without result."

We cannot imagine that these remarks are authentic, since we are accustomed to expect from our master Nordau that he makes himself thoroughly acquainted with things before he criticises them, while the managers of the Co-operative Settlement Society has had up to the present no opportunity of corresponding with Dr. Nordau on the present condition of its development. The criticism reported above must surprise us the more, seeing that the co-operative settlement method had been announced by Herzl himself as the basis of future colonization work. After the above-mentioned remarks have gone round the Jewish press we consider ourselves compelled to lay down the following statements in the interest of the cause.

In the first place it is to be noted that the figures given do not correspond with the facts. It is not true that at the Hamburg congress 100,000 francs were subscribed, of which afterwards only 25,000 were paid. As a matter of fact, about 40,000 francs were subscribed, which were paid in the course of the first year, with infinitesimal exceptions. The entire capital raised by the propaganda campaign for the Co-operative Society amounted after deduction of all propaganda expenses not, as is given above, 125,000, but 145,000 francs.

After half a year's preparation, in which time it was necessary to take certain possession of the land, the normal agricultural work began in October, 1911. The reproach that the official reports have become quiet is not sound. The balance for the first agricultural year 1911-1912 (5672) was reported duly and according to the statutes to the Board of Directors and the general meeting. The balance for the second agricultural year 1912-1913 (5673) is already at hand, and will be laid before the general meeting, to be summoned for May this year of the Co-operative. The management of the Co-operative Society was at any time ready to give any information desired to the holders of share certificates and participation shares who were interested in the state of the farm.

At the request of the directorate Dr. Franz Oppenheimer undertook a tour of inspection in the spring of 1913 to Merchawja and made a public report in a detailed series of articles in the Welt on his stay there and the state of things prevailing in the Co-operative Settlement Society of Merchawja. Since then the pamphlet "Merchawja," by Franz Oppenheimer, appeared in English and Yiddish in New York and announced in the papers. (Vide also essay of the central office of the JNF—"The Co-operative Settlement Society Fund" in No. 10 of the Welt of the 6th of March.) Both agricultural years have concluded with a deficit. The reasons for the losses sustained will be discussed at the next general meeting by the management and made accessible to the public. The report will show that the assertion that the undertaking is a failure is without foundation. It is true that we had to make sacrifices of life and property, but this will be understood when it is remembered that in Merchawja it is a question of new land of which the Jews before owned no inch. Our laborers and guards had above all to do pioneer work and to overcome unusual extra economical and economical difficulties. Two attacks by hostile tribes deranged the normal agricultural work both years. In addition to this in the latter agricultural year there was a devastating plague of mice. Want of decent dwellings, of a plant supplying wholesome water and serviceable farm buildings has cost men and animals untold days of sickness. These attendant phenomena in the opening of a new colonization territory are inevitable and cannot be put down to the co-operative settlement society's method of agriculture.

In addition to these extra economic interruptions which scarcely allow the agricultural work in both years to appear as normal, it must be emphasized that a modern wholesale trade such as that in Merchawja must certainly reckon with losses in the first few years. With all the fruitfulness of which the plain of Israel enjoys, the land has been worn out by the primitive Arabian methods of work throughout the centuries without receiving any additional strength. Even a layman must see that three to five years are necessary to make such land "capable of cultivation" by giving it the necessary manures.

It is the more satisfactory that the co-operative work in Merchawja belongs to the best organized and most modern wholesale trades in Palestine, according to the witness of experienced and objective experts, and that the managers there in both years have exactly kept to the budgets drawn up. Against the expressed pessimistic view we can state that both the workers and the management look forward to the future development of the Co-operative Settlement Society with perfect confidence. The rare devotion of the manager and the laborers to the work, the systematic organization development of all branches of the work, cattle breeding and dairy farming, the plantations and vegetable gardens, finally the favorable position of Merchawja at the junction of the railway line Haifa, Damascus, and its branch which will shortly unite Merchawja with Jerusalem, justify the confidence which the partners of the Co-operative Society "Erez Israel" and also the JNF place in this important social undertaking. This caused the directorate and the author of the plan, Dr. Oppenheimer, to take up the propaganda for the increase of the society's capital, which had originally been estimated too low, with all energy. The experiments which have been made in other countries and in Palestine with the co-operative agricultural method, the preparing of new land, the attempts to solve the agrarian question by internal colonization, induced us to further the propaganda for the Co-operative Society fund and the Co-operative Settlement Society with energy.

In the Co-operative Settlement of Merchawja we see as before a model, the success of which can supply us with the evolution of the townsman unused to farming to peasant, the proving of the newest methods of farming, the systematic preparation of the land being thus made possible and thus can furnish "the foundations for a colonization on a broad basis."

Chairman of the Directorate of the Erez Israel Co-operative Settlement Society.

Praise for Dr. Harris.

Editor HEBREW STANDARD:
Last Sunday I had the pleasure of hearing a lecture on Jewish history delivered at Temple Israel by Rev. Dr. Maurice H. Harris. A lecture on this subject may not be anything new, as we often hear it from the pulpit on special occasions or on special subjects; but I wish to compliment Dr. Harris because he doesn't use a patch or a corner of the history, but has started right at the beginning and intends (and I hope he will be able) to go right through to the present day.

Lectures on ethics are desirable and instructive, but history is far more useful, especially in our case, where it has been so neglected even by those who claim to be Hebrew scholars. As for Sunday school children, many of them think that Jewish history ends with Joseph and his brethren.

Above all, what appealed to me was the fact that Dr. Harris didn't speak from the pulpit, but from the floor directly to his auditors, who gathered about him. Discussion followed the lecture and everybody was interested. Let us hope that other rabbis will follow this example so that we can truly call them "Rabbis of Israel."

Very truly yours,
CHARLES N. MELTSNER.

Jewish Subjects in German Literature.

The discussion of the Jewish question seems to be the latest thing in Germany. It is no doubt one of the effects which the Zionist movement has produced that so many books dealing with subjects of Jewish interest have lately appeared in Germany and are finding so many readers. In former years there appeared only now and again a novel dealing with Jewish subjects on the German book market; books as for instance "Der Weg ins Freie," by Arthur Schnitzler, or "Jettchen Gebert," by Georg Hermann, appeared in intervals of several years. Now we find almost every week a new Jewish book in the windows of the bookshops. Among those which appeared in the course of the last few weeks we find: "Das Ghetto-buch," edited by Landsberger (published by Georg Muller, Munich), which is a compilation of short stories, mostly translated from the Yiddish; further "Glaserne Wand," by Alfred Knobloch, formerly Mayor of Bromberg; this novel describes the life of the Jews in East Germany and the rise of one of them who goes to Berlin (published by Moraw & Scheffelt, Berlin). Robert Lutz, Stuttgart, has just published the German translation of Mary Antin's fascinating book, "The Promised Land"; the German title is "Vom Ghetto ins Land der Verheissung." Among the dramas produced on German stages, one of the most successful was "Die fünf Frankfurter," by Rossler; this play was followed by the production of the somewhat weak drama, "Hinter Mauern," by Henri Nathanson. The German reviews are just now full of discussions on the Jewish problem. The foremost literary review in Germany, "Die neue Rundschau," has recently published a novel by Aage Madelung, "Die Gezeichneten," which deals with the psychology of the Russian pogroms; further a very sympathetic description of Palestine by Alfons Paquet. South Germany's most important political review, "Marz," contains an article by Stefan Grossman, "Grabrede auf den Zionismus," and an answer thereon by Julius Simon, which is a proof of Zionism being very much alive. The monthly review, "Der Staatsbürger," contains in its latest issue an article by Paquet on Christian and Jewish Zionism under the heading: "Die Frage nach dem Sinn," and a criticism of the book, "Vom Judentum," which the Students' Club Bar Kochba in Prague has published. "I almost believe," Paquet concludes his articles, "that if I were a Jew, I should be a Zionist. As I am none of your people, I must restrict myself to admiring you; my national feeling is strong enough not to suffer from it."

Henri Bernstein, who is the leading French dramatist of the day, has for some years been the victim of anti-Semitic attacks. In a recent interview on the subject he said: "I am very well content to be a Jew. I do not say I am proud of the fact. It has always seemed ridiculous to take merit to oneself for an event so involuntary as that of birth. But, as I say, I am very well content. There is only one point about which I find myself in agreement with the anti-Semites. That is that I disapprove more strongly than even they do of the Jew who asks pardon for being a Jew; whose every attitude, every insinuation, every admiration, every relation, is but a badly disguised excuse."

The visit to Haifa of Baron Edmond Rothschild, of Paris, will leave behind it a lasting impression. The Baron has promised the Jewish community the erection of a synagogue, which will be a new centralizing point for the hitherto scattered Jewish settlement. Of still greater and far reaching significance is the fact that Baroness Rothschild has given the funds for the site and cost of erection of a new Jewish hospital in Haifa. A site not far from the Institute of Technology is already under consideration, and as soon as the budget (with which Dr. Auerbach is at present busy) is satisfactorily completed the building will be commenced. Baroness Rothschild herself will contribute annually 6,000 francs.

Herr Joseph Fischer, a well-known Jewish printer and publisher, died in Cracow recently at the age of seventy-three. He rendered important services during the past thirty-five years to the promotion of Hebrew and Jewish literature, and numerous Hebrew and Yiddish periodicals owe their existence to his initiative.

An astounding battle is now in progress between right-minded Russians and Governor Muratoff on the Jewish question. The Governor openly defies the Ministry and the Senate, and continues to expel even privileged Jews from his province, believing in the doctrine of the Novoe Vremya, that Jews must be compelled to leave Tsardom at all costs. He also requested the court to compel seventy-eight rich Jews to dispose of their suburban immovable property amounting to six million roubles. Many Christian deputations (some of them composed of reactionaries) appealed to the Governor to leave the Jews in peace for the sake of the economic welfare of the province, but M. Muratoff dismissed them in an insulting manner. All hopes are now centered on the action of Prince Mestchersky, who last week printed an open letter to the Governor. The old courtier reminded M. Muratoff that the Jews were Russian citizens who paid taxes and were entitled to protection by the state, instead of being subjected to wild nationalistic persecution.

The orange growers of Palestine have reason enough to be satisfied with the present year. Whereas the winter in Europe was rather damp, the winter in Palestine was dry and fine, and the lack of heavy storms was very favorable for the orange cultivation. The prices on the world's market are better than in former years, and a good profit is expected. The export of Jaffa oranges has gradually increased; over 2,000,000 boxes, containing 120 or 150 pieces each, are exported to Liverpool, also to Egypt, Constantinople, Australia and recently even to Germany. Whereas the sale of the oranges was formerly managed by a few individuals, two Jewish and a German orange exporting society, have now been founded, which are said to do very good work.

A committee of young Jews has been formed at Constantinople with the view of erecting a monument to the memory of the Jewish soldiers in the Ottoman army who fell in the last war. The Minister of War has expressed warm approval of the project.

Wagner in "To-Day," now in its seventh month at the Forty-eighth Street Theatre, New York, there are many inquiries as to who she is and how she secured the position so coveted by leading women of established reputations. Miss Valentine was but one of hundreds of young actresses who made application when it was announced that seven companies in addition to the original organization would tour the country next season. This was on Saturday. On Monday morning she was given a rehearsal and found to be letter perfect. She played a Saturday matinee performance so skillfully and was received so well that she was immediately placed under contract and given the role of Lily Wagner permanently.

MUSIC AND DRAMA.

An interesting event this week is the appearance at the Palace Theatre of Miss Jose Collins, the fascinating prima donna, in a very pleasing programme of songs and dances, in which she is assisted by Mr. Robert Evett, late feature of "The Doll Girl." Mr. Frank Keenan, the great American actor, is seen in a strong dramatic playlet entitled "Vindication." An artistic novelty is presented in "Cavalleria Rusticana," sung by a grand opera company of twenty-two persons. Other features are Paul Morton and Naomi Glass, in "My Lady of the Bungalow," Frank Fogarty, the "Dublin Minstrel," Natalie and Ferrari; Prince Flora, the African chimpanzee, and Miss Leitzel, who, assisted by Jeanette, performs marvelous feats with flying rings.

Since Ethel Valentine has achieved such a distinct personal success as Lily

Julia Sanderson, newest and daintiest of musical comedy stars, comes to the Grand Opera House for one week commencing Monday, April 27, with the usual matinees on Wednesday and Saturday, when Charles Frohman will present this winsome miss in the famous London and New York musical comedy success, "The Sunshine Girl." Miss Sanderson, who has charmed play audiences for years with her delightful personality, dainty dancing and charming singing, will appear at the Grand for the first time as a star, Manager Frohman having decided wisely that last season was the proper time to elevate her to this high position, and in order to make success doubly sure he chose a musical comedy which had already taken London by storm during a run of two years at the Gaity Theatre.

"Kitty MacKay," William Elliott's production of Catherine Chisholm Cushing's charming Scotch comedy, will begin the seventeenth consecutive week of its remarkably successful engagement at the Comedy Theatre Monday night. Capacity audiences are attracted at every performance and there remains little doubt but what this delightful comedy will run all through the summer and well into next season. Seats on sale now for Decoration Day matinee and night.

A. Washington Pezet and Bertram Marburgh's charming romantic comedy, "Marrying Money," will begin the seventh week of its engagement at the Princess Theatre on Monday night. Despite reports to the contrary, business has increased to such an extent that the producers have decided to let this clean and wholesome comedy finish the season at the Princess. Nan Campbell and William Roselle have the principal roles.

B. F. Keith's Alhambra Theatre this week features Dazle, the famous dancer, in Sir James M. Barrie's "Pantaloons"; Pat Rooney and Marion Bent in "Twenty Minutes of Pat and Marion"; Juliette Dika, the Parisian singing comedienne; B. A. Reinold and company, in "How Hoffmeister Did It"; Maud Lambert and Ernest Ball in a repertoire of their own songs; "The Cowboy Minstrels," depicting "After the Round-Up"; the Brads, acrobatic comedians; Boland and Holtz, singing and dancing duo, and Charles Thomson, the English juggler.

The Union Hotel, Sharon Springs.

With the approaching summer season people naturally make their plans for summer vacations, some exercising their preference for the mountains and some for the seashore. Nature has endowed various parts of the country with natural beauty and especial advantages and in certain sections are to be found health-giving springs. One of these in particular is Sharon Springs, N. Y., with its sulphur baths, which are as efficacious as any in Europe and naturally save one the trouble, annoyance and expense of traveling for so many miles. In addition to the advantages of its waters, Sharon Springs is surrounded by natural scenery of wondrous beauty and interest, thereby enhancing the sojourner's stay.

Among the hotels at Sharon Springs conducted for observant Jews is the Union Hotel, most beautifully located in the park and conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Garsony, and Mrs. Garsony, who personally supervises the cuisine, has established an enviable reputation for superiority in her department. The Union House has all latest improvements and will reopen for its third season on June 15 and Mr. and Mrs. Garsony as heretofore will do everything in their power for the comfort of their many friends and the public in general.—Advertisement.

"Bring Your Wife" Sign in Campus.

"Bring Your Wife" is the invitation on the advertising matter distributed by Gossler Brothers for their Campus cafe, at Columbus avenue and 104th street. And there is no levity in the line, the strict policy of the management being expressed in the three words quoted. Indeed, there are other evidences around the place which would lead one to believe that the Campus management would like to have the "your" underlined, for they are particular up on Columbus avenue, after ten years' success along lines which would be considered a little unusual by those directing the destinies of other New York eating places. There's one little sign on the wall which describes youths less than 21 years of age as "undesirable guests," and another on the door leading from the men's grill into the main dining room which has it that a woman partner is an absolute requisite for admission to this consecrated ground. These tell how the Campus is conducted and why it enjoys such an enviable reputation among the thousands of New Yorkers who have "discovered" it in their dining-around explorations. Good food, properly prepared and served amid the most delightful surroundings, is the principal attraction in the Campus, but the management has provided a programme of entertainment in keeping with the dignity of the place.—Advertisement.

The well-known hotel man, J. Golenbock, of Asbury Park, N. J., who has for several years past conducted the Hotel Stafford, has now taken a new house, the Hotel Windsor. This is a modern and up-to-date hotel, beautifully furnished, having all conveniences, and which will be catered exclusively to a high-class patronage. It contains about seventy guest rooms, a spacious dining room, and dance parlor. The table will be kosher and in every respect the best. The proprietor intends to jealously maintain this hotel as the best in Asbury Park. The heavy advance bookings already give promise of a prosperous season. It will be opened for business for Decoration Day.—Advertisement.

A "Cupid Dance" was held on Saturday evening last at the Hopkinson Mansion by the auxiliary of the South Side Dispensary of East New York.

A moving picture film of exceptional interest will be shown at the Montauk Theatre next week, beginning Monday afternoon, at prices within the reach of all. It is entitled, "The Last 100 Days of Napoleon," and was posed for by Italian actors in Italy, chief among them Signor Ettore Mazzanti, the celebrated Roman tragedian. "The Last 100 Days of Napoleon" is a film over 6,000 feet in length. It is shown in five parts, requiring two hours to show. The greatest events in the career of that greatest of all generals are pictured. The film will be shown daily at 2.30 and at 8.30, and there will be two special performances on Sunday.

Fun will reign supreme when the "Big Jubilee" burlesquers hold the stage at the Star next week. At the head of an exceedingly strong supporting company is "Pat" White, known from one end of the country to the other as the foremost Irish comedian of the stage. Mr. White succeeds in being funny without giving offense or ridiculing the race. His humor is of the dry kind, that forces you to laugh because it is natural and spontaneous. The usual Sunday concerts will be given.

Orach Chaim League.

The Orach Chaim League held its regular meeting in the vestry rooms of the synagogue on Wednesday evening, April 15, 1914. Despite the heavy rain a goodly number was present. In the address of the evening, which served as the official inauguration of the league, Rev. Dr. M. Hyamson gave a comprehensive outline of the league's work along its threefold objects of educational, philanthropic and social good.

The balance of the programme includes Hines and Fox in a song repertoire; Bankoff and Girlie, Doc O'Neil, Chester Kingston, Burkhardt and Gilfoil, Mack and Ellis, and Gormley and Gaffery.

CHILDREN'S PAGE

IN POVERTY AND IN WEALTH

Dear Children:

Rabbi Jonathan said: "He who carrieth out the Torah in poverty, will eventually fulfill it in wealth; while he who disregards its injunctions because of his wealth shall in the end disregard it in poverty."

Poverty and wealth, dear children, are both great temptations in man's pilgrimage through life; thus says the author of Tifereth Israel, a community on the Nutsina; the Holy One, blessed be He, tests a man in two ways to see if he is proof against sin—one test is Poverty—as necessity can oft drive a person to sin; the other test is Wealth because wealth can lead a person to give way to his passions—but the test of wealth is much more difficult to stand than that of poverty, as one is more prone to sin through wealth than through poverty, the Holy One therefore first tests a person with poverty, which is the easier test, and if he fulfills the commandments of the Torah whilst in poverty, he tries him with the temptation of wealth to see if he will then also be true to the mandates of the Holy Torah, therefore Rabbi Jonathan tells us that if one stood the test of poverty by fulfilling the commandments of the Torah in spite of it he may be sure that he will also succeed in fulfilling the commandments of the Torah when he will be rich, for the Holy One, blessed be He, will help him do so, as the sages have said that "he who wishes to be an upright man is aided by heaven to carry out his wish." It once happened that the Dubner Maggid, of blessed memory, came to Germany. On a day that the Torah is read, when he was praying in one of the synagogues there, he was honored with the Mitzvah of Hagbah (to raise up the Sefer Torah at the end of the reading), and a young German was honored with the Mitzvah of Gelilah (to roll the Torah together). After the one who officiated as Gelilah wrapped a very precious silk girdle around the Torah, and robed it with a heavy gold embroidered mantle, and put a beautifully embellished golden crown studded with brilliant stones upon its silver etz-chayim (its handles, which are called the tree of life), he said to him: "Well, Maggid; what do you think of the way in which we equip the Torah here in Germany, with silver and gold and all kinds of precious stones! Do your people in Russia treat the Torah as we do? Why, there the Torah is very poorly clad!" "Well," said the Dubner, "I will answer this with a Mashal (parable). There were once two sisters, both of whom were married and living at a great distance from each other in different cities. One who lived very far from her parents' house was very rich, whilst the other who lived in the same city where her parents died, was very poor. Once the rich sister begged her husband to permit her, before the holy days of Rosh Hashana and Yom Kippur, to visit the graves of her parents. Her husband, who was immensely rich, had a splendid equipage prepared for her, and together with a maid and two footmen, she traveled in great state to the city of her parents. When she arrived at the cemetery the keeper pointed out to her her father's grave. When she came there she found a poor woman, dressed very shabbily, bending down over her father's grave, and crying and weeping in the usual manner on such an occasion. The rich woman said to the poor one: "Please go away from this grave, as you are on the grave of a stranger, for my father lies here." "No," said the poor woman, "I live in this city, therefore I ought to know that this is my father's grave for many years, and you are a stranger here. Why do you not ask the keeper of the cemetery?" "Why, that is the very grave he showed me," answered the rich woman. "Pray, what was the name of your father?" asked the poor woman. "Rabbi Hayim Heikel Ben Meshulam Feirish." "Why, that is also my father's name," exclaimed the poor woman. "And what is your name?" "Hannah Rosel," answered the rich woman. "Then you are my sister!" cried the poor woman. "Is that you, Fradel!" the rich woman exclaimed, and they fell upon each other's necks and cried and laughed by turns and kissed each other passionately. "How do you feel, dear sister, and how are you getting along. I see that you are very rich, thank heaven. You must assuredly be very happy." "Alas! no; dear sister," answered Hannah Rosel, "although you see me dressed so beautifully, with golden bracelets and diamond rings, as I am rich enough, still I am very unhappy."

בן אהרן

"Does the baby talk yet?" asked a friend of the family of the little brother. "No," replied the little brother, disgustedly. "He don't need to talk. All he has to do is yell, and he gets everything in the house worth having."

The driver of a prison van was hailed by a would-be wag:—
"Got any room inside, Robert?"
"There's room for one," replied the driver; "we keep it for you."
Not entirely disconcerted, the would-be wag had another shot.
"What's your fare?" he asked.
"Bread and water—same as you had before," said the driver.
