The Uncle From Nicaragua

By Leon Feraru

The people on River street, in Flowerfield, Conn., were surprised early one morning to see a strange and imposing looking man sitting near the newspaper stand in front of Baggish's candy store. Surely a queer guest in that small Ghetto! The stranger was an individual of about fifty, with a salt and pepper moustache cut short and a milk-white head, which he always kept uncovered and modestly bent. There was something unusual about his clothes. Everything seemed to shine on him, from his well-kept shoes to his carefully bound necktie. He had nothing extraordinary on, and yet he looked luxurious. Maybe his fancy vest, a yellow heavy corded silk with red spots, like stains of blood, gave him that holiday appearance so greatly appreciated by the passersby and neighbors.

The man who kept tabs on everybody in Flowerfield could hardly get an assuring answer from Baggish to his inquiries about the fancy yellow vest. The candy dealer was very mysterious and his few words did not suffice to quench the questioner's thirst for information. With the progress of the day gossip grew fast. Feinberg, the insurance agent, exchanged many remarks with Charlie, the jeweler, across the street.

"Jake says that it is a relative of Baggish," murmured Feinberg.

"He does not look it. He is too swell for them," was Charlie's reply.

Mr. Budnitzky, the tailor's wife, bought The Drum, a New York Yiddish daily, that she never read before, only to get into conversation with the bowed, milky-white and bared head. The sacrifice, however, was in vain. She got very little indeed out of his replies.

"A nice day! How do you like Flowerfield?"

"A nice day? Flowerfield is a pretty city."

His speech also was queer. It was Yiddish, no doubt, yet another

And the yellow vest answered:

the source. The Flowerfield Ghetto, however, had the secret. And that was enough to satisfy its curiosity.

AARON ADOLPH DE PINTO.

Heer Aaron Adolph de Pinto, the noted Dutch jurist, died last month at The Hague. He was born at The Hague in 1828 and was descended from an old family which settled in Holland after the expulsion from Spain. He studied law and became an LL.D. in 1852. In 1862 he was appointed referendary in the Department of Justice, and after taking other offices, he, in 1903, became vice-president of the Supreme Court. Heer de Pinto was the author of a number of legal works; was a commander of the Order of the Netherlands Lion and an officer of the Crown of Italy. At the meeting in 1907 of the Zionist Congress at The Hague, Heer de Pinto acted as president of the Reception Committee. Upon him fell the chief work in connection with the first Peace Congress at The Hague, and his organization of that body and the preparations for the Congress which he made evoked universal admiration.

The Baggishes lived in a small and dark three-room tenement in back of their candy shop. The family numbered seven souls—father, mother, Ella, Jenny, Fannie, Minnie and Robert. Ella, a maiden of twenty years, helped her mother in the house, waiting for the time when she shall take care of her own house. Jenny worked in a department store. The two little girls went to high school, and Robert was in the seventh grade and was a bright boy for his age. Father did very little business in his candy store. A family like his is a serious proposition.

One day, about two months prior to that memorable morning, Baggish said to his wife:

"Myrl, you are wrong not to write to your brother, over there." She had a brother somewhere in the far countries. Baggish could not locate it, as he was very little acquainted with geography. So he made a gesture as though pointing to a very distant place.

"When Robert was born we got his last letter. Since then we have lost track of him. God knows where he is now."

Here Mrs. Baggish's family pride awoke.

"Everybody knows where Simeon is! I am sure he lives at the same address. It was his own house ere. . . ."

The same gesture was drawn, pointing to the same distant, very distant place.

"Have we his address?" "A question! I keep all the letters we get."

"Well, we ought to write to him. We have neglected our duty too long. We ought to send him a postal card. . . ."

That evening the whole Baggish family was busy writing to Uncle Simeon. The girls insisted it should be a letter and not a postal as father kind of Yiddish. Something which had very little of the old country's accent.

"I come from quite far. Yes, I am his relative."

Too mysterious a man! And he Nevertheless, by dinner time the whole town knew the mystery. Who found it out? Nobody knew suggested. Robert took his geography book and opened it to show his father on the map where Uncle Simeon lived. It was in Managua, the capital of Nicaragua. Baggish could not pronounce the names of the city and country by adoption of Uncle Simeon, but he could see an orange colored thing upon the picture with strange figures, and he knew that he was supposed to see in it something which would remind him of his brother-in-law.

Robert wrote the address and a few lines. Ella added three words. Jenny only signed her name, while the other girls wrote the word "kisses" with great care. Mother filled a whole page with her broad Yiddish handwriting, and Baggish himself composed half a page of courteous and sweet expressions. The letter looked like a diplomatic parchment with numerous signatures and seals of violet blots.

The document was put into its envelope, and that very evening Mr. Baggish went to the postoffice to mail it. He wanted to be sure that the letter would not be lost, so he registered it.

On the way home his thoughts were roseate. At last he had had a good idea. How could he have neglected a relative so long, a brother of his wife, a man like Simeon? Baggish was much perplexed because of some promissory notes, bills to be paid, and the complexity of life in general. A good brother does not forget his sister. Simeon must be very rich. The mere fact that he does not inquire about their health is already a sign that his affairs must be brilliant.

The sole topic of the Baggish family conversation was the uncle from Nicaragua. Baggish even studied how to pronounce the name of that distant country. The idea that a letter was on its way from there filled him with the desire to know more about his brother-in-law's home. Mother sighed and looked at her twenty-year-old daughter. "Perhaps now I shall live to see her happy!" Baggish renewed the two biggest notes for two months. He worked in his candy store with more courage and hope, and no longer grew angry when too many cakes were left over after a holiday or a Sabbath. Jenny had the vague hope of something which would change her life, something that looked like taking the role of Ella very soon. The two schoolgirls had their own ideas about an uncle who lives in Nicaragua and who will surely answer by sending them pretty hair ribbons. As for Robert, he actually traveled to and from Nicaragua ten times a day.

It is true they had no definite idea as to what the answer of the uncle from Nicaragua would be. It was understood, however, that a man like Uncle Simeon, as mother describes him, who was goodness personified, who had a beautiful house in Managua, Nicaragua; who possessed riches which surpasses all imagination, who lived in an orange colored country situated at the very point of the isthmus, a country which connects the two continents like a vein binding two gigantic lungs floating in the vast seas, such a man must be an extraordinary uncle. And Robert got very bad marks for his lack of attention in the classroom.

The time passed with a creeping slowness, and the answer did not come. Baggish began to grow anxious. In the first place, the renewed notes would soon be due. Then, again, being a practical man, Baggish regretted that his letter did not mention something about his financial needs. If it takes so long for an answer—and in all probability his answer will be "dry"—he will have to write again, and before the second answer comes, the "fat" answer, the creditors will devour him. His idea was to write a second letter without waiting for an answer, and in this letter he will ask openly for help. The sooner, the better! The letters will certainly cross on their way. And the uncle from Nicaragua will think that the second letter came as a natural answer. And it must be written in this tone: "My dear Simeon, we read your letter with great pleasure. . . ."

The second missive to Uncle Simeon occasioned a terrible disturbance. Not that Myrl was opposed to her husband's magnificent plan, but Robert was the cause of the tempest. And Baggish himself started the whole affair. He wanted to propose to the uncle from Nicaragua to send for Minnie, whom he will no doubt educate and provide with a dowry. But Robert said he wanted to go to Nicaragua. It was a splendid opportunity for a boy, he said, and he protested strenuously against his father's decision. Robert must be the delegate of the family. He must go to the uncle from Nicaragua. Robert, however, was the only son, the pride of the Baggishes, the "eye of his mother's head," the petted and spoiled child of the house. How could Baggish deprive himself of his only pleasure in life?

Robert took the matter seriously to heart. He fought with all his strength. His mother, as though she already saw him lost in that distant country, wept bitterly. Baggish got angry in turn, threatened to spank his heir, and then entreated him to be good. Baggish promised him all sorts of things Baggish took the strap. Baggish stamped his foot. Baggish kissed the boy. In vain! Robert cried, screamed, became hysterical, and then took to his bed with a fever. He lay sick for two days. And the second letter was not written.

Another week passed without any sign of life from the uncle from Nicaragua. Baggish decided to telegraph. What's the matter with him? Is he living, or, God forbid, is he dead? Baggish went to see a lawyer and spent two dollars for consultation fee. Yes, his wife is the only heir—that is, if the uncle from Nicaragua did not get married. Has he got children? Myrl does not know. When he sent his last letter, twelve years ago, he was not married. A cable would clear the whole mystery. To whom? To the American consul, said the lawyer. And Baggish sent a cable.

It was night. Somebody knocked at the store door. Mrs. Baggish sat up in bed.

"Shulem, somebody is knocking at the front door!"

"What is it? Who is it?"

"Don't you hear? Somebody!"

"How should I know who it is?"

"What do you want me to do?"

Mrs. Baggish gets excited.

"What a question! Don't you want to see who it is?"

"Oh, yes!"

Baggish runs to the door.

"Who is there? Who?"

Now Baggish is in the store. Myrl hears something unusual. The door opens and Baggish makes an exclamation as though greeting an old-time friend. She hears kisses. A sudden warmth fills her heart. She has a presentiment. She cannot make a step. Her feet are as heavy as lead. She wants to scream, to run to the door, to stretch out her arms, to welcome the great guest. But she remains standing near the bed like a statue. "Simeon, my dear brother!"

That's all that she can say, and she falls into her brother's arms as he comes toward her. And then she faints away out of sheer joy.

The house is lit up. The girls, surprised and dazzled by the light, begin to scramble for their clothes.

Stories of the New Lord Rothschild—The Hon. Edwin Samuel Montagu Plays Important Part in Government Appeal for Bigger Production of War Material—Miss Franklin to Represent Jewish Peace Society at the Hague Conference—Recruiting Jews in London for the Army.

LONDON, April 16.—I do not want to overload these columns with Rothschild stories, but perhaps a little further chat about the new Lord Rothschild may not be out of place and will probably close the Rothschild family reminiscences in this letter for a while. In many ways the new Lord Rothschild is different from the late lord. He is a much shyer man and he makes fewer friends. He is not a keen politician. I believe he sat in the House of Commons as Member of Parliament those eleven years for Aylesbury, not because he liked the atmosphere of Parliament, but because he thought it his duty. When he retired they said he had never spoken once in the House, but this I think was a mistake, for I have a recollection of his making a speech on a matter connected with the Board of Fisheries.

The papers were so interested in his "zoo," in the $100,000 book on extinct birds he was known to be preparing in his search for young gorillas to test the capacity of the Zoological Gardens to rear them, that they failed to do him justice in the House. Had it not been for his Tring collection and his natural history predilections quite a literature could have been built around his head-gear innovations. He was the first man to appear in the Commons in a straw tall hat, a sartorial contraption much more amazing than the white hat of Mr. Hugh Watt or the brown straw trilby of Mr.

John Hodge. The Hon. Walter, too, like the cuckoo's note, brought the first news that spring had arrived. When you saw him in his white tall hat it was safe to conclude that the winter was at an end.

One often ran across him at New Court. He had a way of marching along the corridors of the bank with his head high in the air, looking more like a gladiator than a financier. In those days, he dressed curiously and provincially, and it was almost painful to contrast his bucolic suitings with the sober, orthodox city black of his father. One wonders whether the ill-dressed Hon. Walter will become the well-dressed Lord Rothschild.

Once when I happened to be at the bank he passed me in the corridor and his huge frame was shaking with laughter. I have never seen anybody laugh so wholeheartedly. Elsewhere I might not have thought anything of the incident. After all, laughter is not so uncommon that one need attach any particular significance to it, but hilarity that provoked one of the principals in the Rothschild firm to such agitation was sufficiently rare to induce me to make a mental note of it. What was the joke? I never knew. I wonder if it was the ingenuous story of the Arctic flea for which one of the Rothschilds was supposed to have paid $5,000 that came to this country via that very imaginative country America!

The financial district of London has always been very curious about the new Lord Rothschild—curious because they knew so little about him. They saw him, of course, coming and going to the bank in St. Swithin's lane, but they said to one another, "Oh, he has an appointment at the bank with some bird of paradise collector. Presently you will find that courtyard in New Court full of crates." All fables, mind you, because dealers who had rarities to offer him, usually went to Tring. Still, when there is the heir to untold wealth in your midst and you cannot find out anything about him you must invent something! As a matter of fact, when they saw the Hon. Walter drive up if they had said he was going to assist his father in the business of the bank they would have been nearer the truth. I wonder what they said when they came across the Hon. Walter in his father's company on 'Change? He surely could not have had an appointment there with a wild animal dealer, although all around him were bulls and bears!

As compared with his father, the new Lord Rothschild has only taken a moderate part in the business of the firm, but under the direction of the three able brothers, the late peer, Mr. Alfred and Mr. Leopold, there was hardly room for a fourth brain. In any case, excepting the last few years, I saw him at the bank on many occasions. No doubt he preferred the amenities of Tring, with its giant tortoises and wonderful butterflies, to the less exotic atmosphere of New Court. I merely mention that he did go to business to destroy an amiable city superstition that whenever the Hon. Walter came to St. Swithin's lane it was to buy a Himalayan bear, a wild cat, or a rather expensive hawk eagle.

When the new Lord Rothschild sat in Parliament for Aylesbury he had his brown beard trimmed like a Spanish exquisite with five points. Latterly it has become square-shaped, and there is more than a suspicion of grey in it. In build he is much heavier than his father, who was tall and rather spare; he favors rather his uncle, Mr. Leopold, but his shoulders are perhaps broader. He wears his hair rather thick at the back of his head; on top he is quite bald. In any assembly, because of his fine proportions and striking face, he would be a conspicuous figure.

To the Jewish community he is as unknown a quantity as to the general public. It is hardly to be expected of him that he will take the same interest in the affairs of his race as his father, for he has never been very closely associated with Anglo-Jewry, although he has attended several of their functions. Still, it is very hard to tell. The greater responsibilities to which he has been called may develop all manner of unsuspected activities in him. The Jewish community, however, feel that the new Lord Rothschild will scarcely fill his father's place, so far as they are concerned, and they are at a loss to know how to repair the breach that the late Lord Rothschild's death has made. This is hardly giving the successor to the title a chance, but the son of every great father has to suffer the same penalty.

The Hon. Edwin Samuel Montagu, who has been playing a leading part in the recent labor conference (which had as its reason the stimulating of the production of war material), is the youngest member of the Cabinet, being only thirty-five. He looks, however, very much older, and has a reputation for being wise beyond his years. He is a very intimate friend of the Prime Minister's, with whom he constantly stays in Scotland. Mr. Montagu is still unmarried, and as the second son of Lord Swaythling is a wealthy man. Like Mr. Herbert Samuel, he is said to be a strict observer of Jewish rites. But he hardly carries this so far as another Jewish M. P. I know.

Miss Franklin, who is a niece of Lord Swaythling, will represent the Jewish Peace Society of Great Britain at the Women's Peace Conference in Holland. This is to meet at The Hague on April 28, and will discuss the questions which women wish to see settled by any treaty of peace. It promises to be a really significant conference of representative women. Belgium, England, Austria-Hungary and Germany will be represented by delegates—Germany probably very largely—and though France has not agreed so far to come in officially, several Frenchwomen will probably be present. Italy is sending several delegates, and a large contingent are to go from Denmark, while, of course, the women of Holland are arranging the whole affair. It is interesting to learn that a party of fifteen Americans is expected to go direct to Rotterdam from New York under the leadership of Miss Jane Addams, who will probably be asked to preside at the Congress. Mrs. Pethick Lawrence, who has been working in America, is returning for this Congress, and other prominent suffragists who will attend are Mrs. Despard, Miss Sylvia Pankhurst, and Miss Evelyn Sharp. Mrs. Pankhurst herself, leader of the English suffragettes, is quite opposed to the conference and will not attend. Miss Violet Vanbrugh intends to go, Olive Schreiner will represent South African women, and Mrs. Voynich the women of Poland, while Miss Lind, of Hageby, who has organized a peace society on her own lines, will be one of the Scandinavians.

Lord Reading, formerly better known as Sir Rufus Isaacs, has been conducting some big recruiting meetings in this country. One very large air show at Shoreditch Town Hall, in the end of London, on April 14. In the course of a striking speech he declared that the Jews of the United Kingdom have borne their share and taken their part in a way which will compare quite well with any other section of the community. Something like 11,000 Jews are at present serving in his Majesty's forces. That is a very good record for a small community like ours, especially when it is remembered that a large number are not capable of service, because they are not of British birth or naturalization. "But," said Lord Reading, "we must not be satisfied with doing as well as others; we must do better. Of all the Jewish men whom I know—my own relatives and friends—I do not find a single one of military age who did not at an early date enroll himself among those who were prepared to do what he could."

England had deserved well of the Jews; therefore they must strive to beat all records. He had no fear but that the Jews would acquit themselves well on the field of battle; they had already done so. Some had already paid their tribute, some had earned a fame which would endure long after they had themselves passed away. But they wanted a great "Victory" Luncheon to Mrs. Einstein.

The board of directors of the Widowed Mother's Fund Association gave a "victory celebration" luncheon on Friday at Delmonico's to Mrs. William Einstein in recognition of the successful outcome of her years of effort to have a widowed mother's pension measure passed by the New York Legislature.

Mrs. Einstein, years ago in Rochester, initiated the whole movement in this country for State relief of widows with young children. In the intervening years she has worked with untiring energy to forward the reform; she has appeared before philanthropic and civic societies and wherever else she could present the case for the poor widow. Hearings at Albany on the measure that was finally drafted found her before the State Legislature using the influence of a winning personality and of intelligently presented arguments to convince the Solons of the justice and the advisability of relieving the terrible burdens under which the widowed mothers as a class have heretofore staggered.

The laws for widow pensions enacted now by twenty-three States, including New York, attest the power of a single-hearted effort intelligently directed in behalf of a cruelly afflicted and helpless class.

Mrs. Henry Meyers officiated as toast-mistress and the program included an address by Mrs. Isidore Lewi, presentation by Mrs. Henry Zuckerman, and songs by Mrs. Harry Kraft. Mrs. Charles Oppenheim then read the following poem composed for the occasion by Miss Annette Kohn:

THE FEAST OF VICTORY.

In olden times the Hebrew said, "Before we feast, let's praise the Lord!" And straightway offered up his prayer, As he sat down to festal board.

We too are gathered here today To praise the Lord and sit at feast, Rejoicing that our prayer He heard, That human justice be increased.

So every home where widows dwell, With children gathered at the knee Bereft of father—love and care To motherhood shall sacred be.

(And if it chance, as chance it may, That one prove frailer than the rest, Should we withhold a pitying hand, And say that others be not best?)

"Yea, this the work of our own hands, Thou hast, oh, Lord, established it," And where the clouds hung dark and low, The place with sun of hope is lit.

And so, here hearts and hands we join To aid the need of chivalry; To bring the tribute that is due To her who won the victory.

Whose heart did plan—whose brain did toil, By doubts untroubled or by fears, "That mercy be to Justice strained," And stand as Law—through all the years.

Other addresses were made by Mrs. Samuel Elkeles, Mrs. Samuel Koenig, Mrs. I. Crane and Miss Annette Kohn. Among the hostesses at the "victory" luncheon were Mrs. M. Benjamin, Mrs. Bodenheimer, Mrs. I. Crane, Mrs. Wm. Einstein, Mrs. S. Elkeles, Mrs. Floer-sheimer, Mrs. Goodman, Mrs. Dan Guggenheimer, Mrs. R. Guggenheimer, Mrs. Hermann, Mrs. L. Kamalky, Mrs. S. Koenig, Miss Annette Kohn, Mrs. Harry Kraft, Mrs. Kugelmann, Mrs. Isidore Lewi, Mrs. Hy. Meyers, Mrs. Minzes-helmer, Mrs. J. Mittelmann, Mrs. H. Moskowitz, Mrs. Olleshelmer, Mrs. Charles Oppenheim, Mrs. Max Phillips, Mrs. H. Rosenbaum, Mrs. Jos. Schoenberg, Miss Sara X. Schottenfels, Mrs. Jeff Selizman, Mrs. Stein, Miss Tekulski and Mrs. Hy. Zuckerman.

Louis D. Brandeis at Columbia.

An overflow crowd of men and women packed Earl Hall, Columbia University, last Sunday night to hear Mr. Louis D. Brandeis of Boston, Mass., talk on "Zionism" before the Collegiate Zion League. Eight hundred were crowded into the hall, which has a normal capacity of 600, and later Mr. Brandeis addressed an overflow crowd in the Trophy room below. In the audience were prominent physicians, lawyers, engineers and teachers.

Mr. Brandeis brought out the fact that no matter how scattered or how threatened by environment, the Jewish nation as an entirety did not suffer except from actual intermarriage and the resulting dilution of Jewish blood.

As to return to Palestine, Mr. Brandeis distinctly stated that the Palestinian centre of Jews could take care of but a part of the Jews of the world so that the aim of Zionism is not depopulation of other countries, but merely the establishment of a publicly recognized and legally secured home for all oppressed Jews in Palestine.

"Zionism is an actuality," declared the speaker. "It is a potential force in Jewish life. It has revived with its practical activities, the necessary adjunct of any living nation, a living forceful and literal Hebrew language."

New Old Home Dedicated.

The new home for homeless Hebrew men and women, under the auspices of the Harlem Home of the Daughters of Israel, was dedicated last Sunday, at Nos. 32-34 East 119th street. There was a large assemblage, and interesting addresses were made by Rabbi M. S. Margolies, Rev. Henry S. Morals, Judge Otto A. Rosalsky and Assemblyman Joseph Steinberg. Music for the occasion was furnished by the Hebrew Orphan Asylum. In response to the stirring appeals of some of the speakers, some large donations were received by the home.

The exercises continued on Monday and Tuesday evening, and besides a number of addresses there were interesting musical exercises under the direction of Cantor Joseph Rosenblatt.

Towards the close of the meeting, the audience was entertained with some very fine musical and literary numbers.

The Uncle From Nicaragua

Robert, who at once grasped the full meaning of the hubbub, is at the knees of his uncle from Nicaragua, who pats him and kisses him. Myrl again feels faint. Baggish runs to get the vinegar and Ella gives him the kerosene can.

Baggish, massaging his wife's wrists, is impatient to learn the reason for his brother-in-law's long silence.

"How is it you did not write us—even a postal card—to say that you are coming?"

Mrs. Baggish is now revived. She looks with admiring eyes at her brother, and her tearful glances have the same interrogation. The children cannot take their eyes away from that wonderful red and yellow vest. Uncle Simeon again kisses his nephew, and in a low voice relates his short tale:

"Your letter found me in extreme distress," says he; "I wanted to write you long ago, but as I had lost your address I had no way of getting it again."

Here the uncle from Nicaragua sighs, and continues:

"Ten years ago I married a rich widow. My business was flourishing. I had a big dry goods store in Managua. As you know, however, luck is capricious. After five years of happiness my wife took sick and died."

"Nu?" asks Baggish, seized with a sudden foreboding.

"Nu," resumes Uncle Simeon; "don't you understand? Things went from bad to worse. With the loss of my wife, I lost everything. Finally I became a burden upon the community. Your letter came as a Godsend. Sick of public charity, I decided to finish my mournful life among you, and the money for the journey was the last I asked for. All that remains of my former wealth is this."

With an instinctive gesture he touches his fancy red and yellow vest. Baggish takes a sniff from the vinegar bottle. A great despair contorts his face for a moment. A second later, however, he regains his composure.

"How did you get the letter?" he asks.

"A registered letter never gets lost, especially when it is directed to a man who was once a prominent figure in the town."

Baggish's curiosity goes farther. "And suppose I had not sent it registered? Do you think a simple letter might have been lost? But, anyhow, that's all past."

In a mild and protective tone of voice he continues:

"Well, brother Simeon, be welcome. We shall provide for you here as best we can. My business

This water is drawn from a spring in the beautiful Lithia Valley at the foot of East Mountain, in Northern Pennsylvania. The water comes from a subterranean reservoir, and the spring, being 2½ miles from a railroad, is free from contamination.

"Liposo" derives its name from the first two letters of the words lithium, potassium and sodium, which this water contains, and the health-giving properties of which are recognized by scientists all over. It is bottled with greatest care and is charged with its own natural gas. As a table water it has no superior.

roll of honor—so long that it would have again and again to be renewed—a list of men who had earned undying fame for themselves and the Jewish population of which they were a part.

Lionel de Rothschild at the same meeting said the Jews of this country, who lived under free laws, with every position open to them, with no race prejudice to encounter, with every Englishman welcoming them into their homes, had now a great chance of showing their gratitude. Let every young Jew in the meeting show that he was ready to do his duty.

Sir Harry Samuel said they, as the lineal descendants of a civilized nation of old, after all their trials and stress and trouble, were at last cradled in the lap of the new civilization. Let them, therefore, fight for their country.

At intervals during the meeting the "Fall in" was sounded by buglers and young Jew after young Jew upon each occasion stepped forward in response to these various exhortations and was promptly recruited.

The Jews' Services to Philosophy and to Statesmanship.

A word is due to the services which our scholars have rendered to the study of philosophy. To their Latin translations of Aristotle, Plato and the Arabian philosophers we have already alluded. It was through such translations that these works were made accessible to medieval Europe, and in particular to the Schoolmen. Scholastic philosophy undoubtedly owed its existence to the impetus given by Jews to philosophical speculation in the Dark Ages, and inasmuch as Scholasticism formed the bridge connecting ancient with modern thought, the indebtedness of modern philosophy to Jewish influences is greater than is usually supposed. At a time when, owing to the closing of the philosophical schools at Athens by the edict of the Emperor Justinian, metaphysics had fallen into decay, it was a Jew, Ibn Gebirol, who, under the pseudonym of Avicenna, wrote a treatise, the Fons Vitæ, which had the effect of rousing the European mind out of its lethargy, and to which the leaders of the Scholastic philosophy were greatly indebted. In other ways, also, Jews exercised far-reaching influence on the development of modern thought. For by combining with the Spanish Moors to introduce the study of physical science into Europe, they helped to stir up a spirit of rational inquiry and to stimulate that fearless search after truth which is a feature of modern times. The success which Jews have attained in statesmanship is not less remarkable than their distinction in other fields. And, as Lord Rothschild's inspiring career reminds us, they owed their position as statesmen not alone to their wide attainments and keen intelligence, but also and principally to their moral integrity. Princes were not slow in discovering that they could count on the fidelity of their Jewish subjects; and to this more than to any other cause must be attributed their rapid advance in royal favor. Jews held a high place at the court of the Egyptian Ptolemies and in the esteem of the early Roman emperors. Charlemagne sent a Jewish ambassador to the court of Haroun Al-Raschid. Many of the Arabian Khalifs availed themselves of the services of Jewish ministers. In Spain the policy of Moorish kings in this respect was followed by their Christian successors. Occasionally even Popes, like Alexander III., employed Jewish finance ministers. One of the most remarkable names in this connection is that of Don Isaac Abarbanel, the great Biblical commentator. At first he was minister of Alphonse V. of Portugal. On the death of that monarch, which was followed by an expulsion of the Jews, he became Finance Minister of Ferdinand of Castile. Subsequently Ferdinand and his consort Isabella fell under the fanatical influence of Torquemada and consented to the expulsion of the Jews from Spain in 1492. Abarbanel's intercession for his coreligionists having proved unavailing, Abarbanel sought an asylum in Naples, where he became minister of Alphonse V. and continued to hold office until Alphonse was driven out of Naples. He accompanied his royal master to Venice, where his political services were again

בהר בחקתי פרק ה'

Our annual Jewish Woman's Number will be issued next week. Correspondents are requested to have matter for that number reach us not later than Tuesday morning.

A former Jesuit has published an expose of the workings of the religious society to which he at one time belonged, in the course of which he declares that one of the conditions required of candidates for admission to the order is that they be not of Jewish descent. In other words, the Jesuits demand of their votaries that proof which he, whose name their society uses in its title, could never have produced.

We look forward at this period of the Jewish year to the Shebuoth festival. When this will have drawn round the summer season is ushered in with its observance of Tisha b'Av and the Selichoth days at the conclusion of that season. On these last follow close the high holidays of the autumn, to be succeeded by the days when the earth is in her winter sleep. Thus does the Eternal, blessed be He, order His world!

We have as a community passed through the fire of the annual meetings of many of our communal organizations and entered upon another year of progressive work for the weal of Jewry at large. It is to be hoped that all our institutions will not experience in the future what has been brought home to them in the recent past, and that the measure of support they are entitled to receive will be theirs in even superabundant measure.

In The Maccabean for April Jacob de Haas gossips very entertainingly about the relations the Lord Rothschild sustained to Zionism. From his words it is apparent that even here, as in all matters Jewish, the deceased peer adopted as his view that juste milieu which Aristotle was perhaps the first succinctly to commend to the attention of thinking men. Lord Rothschild's opposition to Zionism was very characteristic and also very definite, but, great Jew as he was, he did not indulge his spirit of antagonism with any petty exhibitions of spleen. For this reason, probably as much as for any other, he was what he was.

The story that an Italian Jewish corps was forming to seize Palestine for our people by force of arms has been proved to be made out of whole cloth. As a rumor the tale lacked every element of verisimilitude, and therefore the wonder is that our Zionist friends thought it wise or necessary to issue an official denial of its truth. Italy has her work "cut out" for her, colloquially speaking, at this time, and it is altogether improbable that any Jewish subjects of Victor Emmanuel III. would seek to emulate the example of American filibusters who were thorns in the side of every President of the United States during the period that Cuba groaned under the iron heel of Spain.

Herman Landau, the eminent philanthropist of the London community, who characteristically rejoices to emphasize his lowly origin by oftentimes referring to himself simply as "a Polish Jew," gave a heartrending description of the misery of present Polish conditions to the English newspapers the other day. Mr. Landau knows whereof he speaks, for he has sources of information concerning Polish conditions which are inaccessible to other men. According to his narrative, the Jews and the non-Jews of Poland are equally harassed, but the situation in which the former find themselves is infinitely worse than the difficulties are which beset the latter. For the Polish Jews have passed through a frightful campaign of economic stress in the last two years, and even now are the shuttlecocks of contending armies that have turned their land into a veritable shambles. Mr. Landau appeals for succor in the name of humanity for all the Polish distressed. His charity is so broad and so deep, in other words, he is so imbued with the olden Jewish virtue of Zedokoh to the full, that he knows no differences of race and creed in the case of the poor creatures for whom he is appealing to the world. It is a noble attitude that he takes up, and one that should be remembered by the non-Jewish Poles when the storm of the present war has passed. They have latterly maltreated and savagely abused the Jew in Poland, and the latter has been unable to help himself. It is because of these facts that we feel Mr. Landau, creditable though his action is, has been almost more than human in his endeavor.

The new Lord Rothschild is described as a zoologist of no mean attainments, who has specially distinguished himself in the domain of ornithology. On his public and communal activity the pressmen are discreetly taciturn. Is the knowledge of birds all that the new lay head of Anglo-Jewry requires to preside over the council of the United Synagogue or to guide the affairs of the London Jews' Free School?

Dr. Caleb Williams Saleeby, the British eugenicist, is the latest subject of the Jewish Chronicle interviewer, and utilizes his opportunity to utter some tolerably well-worn truths concerning Jewish racial fitness. Dr. Saleeby's testimony is interesting and important, but not novel, and what he says was well known for many years. The Jews are a superior race because they understand how to take care of themselves and fully appreciate their duty to their offspring. This obtains with them rather better even in the squalid quarters of a ghetto than in the palatial homes of the wealthy. Such being the case, if the Jews can but preserve themselves and their posterity for their religion the problem of Jewry in one of its many phases will have been successfully negotiated. It is of interest to find Dr. Saleeby detailing his Jewish descent to his interviewer; this fact invests his remarks with a heightened interest.

In the present agitation, which has almost assumed the size of a nation wide movement, for a compulsory daily reading of the Bible in the public schools, the various older Jewish national organizations are conspicuous by their inactivity. They above all others should seek to zealously preserve the palladium of American liberty, the complete separation of Church and State. Yet in all this turmoil we do not recall to have seen any reference to their existence. How pleasant it is in this connection to be able to point to a national body, but newly born, which is doing its full duty to the community along all phases of development committed to its care. The Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America, which the people of the State of New York represented in Senate and Assembly have just incorporated, has been "present yearly" in every matter which concerns the civil and religious rights of American Jews.

A non-Jewish scholar of Philadelphia is authority for the interesting statement that the Jews of the first century of the common era had three different systems of shorthand reporting. For, he adds, in every Jewish court a shorthand reporter or clerk sat on each side of the presiding judge. This accords with what is known of the Hebrew system of jurisprudence, a system, he it noted, which sought to render, and almost always accomplished its purpose, of rendering exact justice between the complainant and the defendant. Our present jurisconsults must hark back to the ancient Hebrew method for adequate notions of ideal justice and complete punishment for wrongs inflicted. Under such a system is it any wonder that the judge was actively supported by scribes who took a faithful transcript of all the evidence adduced so as to enable the former equably to dispense human justice and to reach a just decision? The wonder is that this interesting fact is not more generally known.

The Jewish World, with a lofty manner that is characteristically British, often indulges in criticism at the expense of the American Jewish press, and reads the latter more or less severe lectures from time to time. In especial, our London contemporary is ever pleased to tell us and the other Jewish weeklies printed in English in this country how fervently individual Jews without exception, and Jewish congregations and organizations of all sorts, support the Anglo-Jewish press. Hence by inference this press is not only a great power for molding public opinion, but a paying proposition, commercially speaking, which of course is balm of Gilead to our English cousins. That is why, of course, The Jewish World has entered upon what it calls "our insurance scheme" as "a real boon to the constant friends of this journal." Since The Jewish World is an English publication, this insurance scheme is an altruistic philanthropy. If, by any stretch of the imagination, The Jewish World were an American publication, Anglo-Jewish editorial critics might dub the insurance scheme an advertising medium, or even a feature of a campaign to increase circulation.

We can understand why the self-constituted leaders of the community by virtue of their headship of the "great and glorious" Kehillah are opposed to the holding of an American Jewish congress to deal with war relief. The program of such a gathering seems innocuous and humanitarian enough, and on the face of it no valid objection thereto may be made. But we fancy that the reason for the opposition of our "statesmen" to the project is more deep seated. They know the "public" they depend upon for their "suffrages" and "mandates." They fear to permit the loose and unbridled discussion of war relief, which may easily pass into the loose and unbridled discussion of the war itself, on the part of the aggregation which the "great and glorious" Kehillah may send to such a congress. We don't blame them, and for this reason we have consistently favored the holding of such a congress and consistently opposed any agitation which looks to identify either the American Jewish Committee or its "great and glorious" constituent with it. Let the congress be called, but let it be composed of men who are not "statesmen," who have Jewish hearts and who realize their full responsibility in the present stressful hour to the Jewry of the world. Incidentally it may be observed that the present impasse in the fortunes of the "great and glorious" Kehillah is but what was anticipated by some of those present at its birth and who recall the "fearful and wonderful" way in which it was born.

HOW GOD AND MAN MOVE FORWARD

כעשרה מאמרות נברא העולם:

"By Ten Words the world was created. And what is learned therefrom? For could it not have been created by One Word? But it was that vengeance might be taken on the wicked who destroy the world that was created by Ten Words; and to give a goodly reward to the righteous, who maintain the world that was created by Ten Words." Aboth, V, 1.)

ANCIENT wisdom and modern thought agree in more than one essential respect. There is scarcely a modern theory of the world whose spiritual ancestor may not be found in the speculations and guesses, nay in the crude superstitions, of former ages. The kinship is not always easily discernible;—there is, for instance, a wide gulf between ancient mythology and twentieth-century science, between electric eons and deities;—yet the knowing mind, sympathizing with all that the spirit of man has labored to produce here on earth, will not fail to find the connecting link between the most disparate modes of thought, between such as call to us from the past like lost spirits and such as hail us in the present as friends and familiar genii. Nor are the thoughts of old all to be likened to lost spirits, for they have their re-appearances: they "come back;" as is proven by the fact that our own science has actually recovered many of the notions, deemed fantastic and impossible, of earlier epochs, such as, for example, the transmutation of the elements, which latter has made the astonishing journey from the devil's-kitchen of the juggling Alchemist to the laboratory of the present-day seeker after those secrets which God has hidden away in the infinitesimal recesses of matter.

These agreements between the old and the new, these resuscitations and re-births from the old into the new, need not astonish us at all. We must bear in mind that back of them lies the human mind, this wonderful God-devised tool; and the human mind has been essentially the same throughout the ages. Hence human experience, the quality and character of the intellectual treasures which the mind has quarried from nature, has always been essentially the same. Forever there has been this restlessness on the part of the mind to solve the riddle of the universe; and, essentially, the mind has always found refuge from the oppression of the seen in the elusive and persuasive charm of the unseen; and, finding the seen constant in its operation, it did not, after all, change much its conception of the unseen: for, all being said, is there much difference, essentially, between the olden deities that nestled in shrubs and seaweed, that roared in thunders and billows, and the forces that preside over all growth and movement, that roar more loudly than the gods in steam and electricity? The chief thing is that we be not led astray by mere names, and that we recognise beneath all names the selfsame activity of the mind making, through the ages, for oneness of experience.

These reflections are evoked by the text. One easily recognises in the text the germ, the spiritual father of the theory of evolution, held to be the modernest of all modern hypotheses. How much uncouth and vulgar rejection of the more reverential attitude of former generations towards existence this supposedly modern theory has caused should be called to mind. It would probably be mortifying to some of those who strut about bandying the word, scarcely the knowledge of, Evolution to learn that the notion—if not the name—existed ages and ages ago. It would take us too far afield to show how this thought appeared and re-appeared in the history of human speculation; what eminent place it occupied in the mystic writings of the Jewish people; suffice it to say that in regard to it, the human mind behaved very much in the same manner as toward other possible explanations of the universe, swinging to and from it with the unexplainable rhythm of thought-movements. And if, looking towards the essence, we disregard mere names, we shall have no difficulty in connecting our text with the theory of evolution.

The common element will be found in the fundamental proposition, accepted in the text, that Creation was not a single act but a rather protracted process. The Cosmos did not spring forth ready-made from the Creative Hand. It was not the result of a single "maamar," a single Creative Fiat. It was the result of Ten Maamaroth, Ten Creative Words. Now, essentially, what is the difference between the theory which proposes that the creative process evolved through unconscionable aeons, and our text which practically admits the same process but holds it to have been of shorter duration? Clearly, the difference is only one of time, of calendar, of history. The common thought, of which we must not lose sight, is that of a Creative Power which did not spend itself in one brilliant effort but evolved during a longer or shorter period. God marched slowly and impressively through the worlds, filling all space with light and life and song; and marking His traces with color and growth and law-bound harmony.

If we understand this proposition, we shall also grasp the next proposition contained in the text. Surely there is no connection on the surface between the creative process and the retribution of just and unjust. But if our conception is that of a God who marches through life marking His onward journey with impressive tokens of Power and Love, the question is but natural, Whither, to what End, does He tend? What is the Goal of the Divine Itinerary? And the answer is: Towards Ethical Perfection in Man—that is the Goal! The far gleam of stars finds its last fulfillment in the beams of Love shining in mortal eyes. God had not intended to call into being a mere machine, which might have been created in a single act; He had intended to create and perfect man's soul, and therefore He taught that soul the lesson, engraven in rocks and embroidered in roses, that as God journeyed forward in creating His world so must man strive forward in order to create, maintain and perfect his—morally determined—world. For Striving is the One Word into which the meaning of the Ten Words is packed.

REAL NEUTRALITY.

If we ever felt we were confirmed by events in the attitude we adopted at the outset of this war, and have consistently maintained ever since, it was when we perused the more or less interesting correspondence between Professor Gotthard Deutsch, of Cincinnati, and Dr. Abraham S. Yahuda, now of Madrid, in a recent issue of The American Israelite. Our Cincinnati contemporary has very definitely espoused the German-Austrian cause in the present struggle, and, although we credit it with a thorough comprehension of its duty as an American Jewish weekly newspaper, and the sincere attempt to realize it, we think it has erred on the side of enthusiasm and overzeal. For while editors are human beings, and as such entitled to harbor opinions for themselves on passing events, the function of the newspaper press in this country is to lead in an impartial outlook on the conflict of the contending forces in Europe, inclining neither to the one side nor to the other in editorial utterances, and reporting news solely and simply as news. Because we realized the serious obligations devolving upon us in the premises we have been roundly condemned by "pro-Allies" sympathizers and have lost here and there a subscriber whose perfervid sympathy with the two Kaisers blinds him to the true position of America. It is beside the mark to point to other journals, even to The American Israelite, who do not heed these facts.

The Deutsch-Yahuda controversy has another side to it which aggravates its seriousness. If the historian simply had charged the Spanish-Oriental scholar with a breach of hospitality in attending an intercession service at Madrid for the Allies the latter's answer, in which he proves his British nationality, affords him a complete defense. But when the former speaks inferentially of treason to ruler and country in a Jewish journal, of a fellow Jew and for purposes other than strictly Jewish, the situation becomes fraught with the gravest danger to the Jewish cause all over the world. We are not concerned so much with this controversy itself, a mere incident supplying the required concrete illustrations for the principle involved, as we are concerned with the responsibility of the American Jewish editor. He is, or ought to be, Jewish and American or American and Jewish, and whole-souled and unreserved in his allegiance to his country and in his fidelity to his race. This being so, he should leave the present war to the respective belligerents and be ever mindful of his own great responsibility.

The report of the central administration of the Jewish Colonization Association for the year 1913, as submitted to the general meeting of the council of June 27, 1914, has been printed in the customary volume form. We commented on the details of this at the time it was made public, and need not do more now than to point out that for a general conspectus of Jewish conditions in the realm of philanthropy no better medium exists than the several reports of this association. Wherever the ICA is interested in the eleemosynary work among Jews undertaken by one form of activity or another, a succinct account of accomplishments and failures is presented. Thus we have in these pages a review of the labors of our Industrial Removal Office and of the Baron de Hirsch Fund. The latter is considered first from the point of view of the trade school in New York, and, secondly, from that of the colonies and institutions in New Jersey. The Jewish Agricultural and Industrial Aid Society also claims a few words of comment.

We have had the pleasure of reading the excellent address of Louis Marshall, which he presented for the American Jewish Committee to the last convention of the "great and glorious" Kqillah. We speak of it in these terms of praise for the reason that it contains a graphic, nay, a sensitive and poetic, account of the incidence of the present great war on the Jews of the world. It gives a full description of the horrors of all wars and of the present, perhaps the greatest and most devastating. It points out that the attitude of neutrality adopted and maintained by our country was and is wise and statesmanlike, and that it behooves American Jews to support by their acts such an attitude in all places. It defends, then, the attitude of neutrality taken up by the American Jewish Committee, which is truly a work of supererogation, for we defy anyone in this country to attack the committee for this reason. Finally the address considers the advisability of calling a congress of American Jews, and comes to the conclusion that such would be both dangerous and impolitic. In this we part company with Mr. Marshall and exclude this part of his remarks from the praise above bestowed on them. We need not, however, detail our criticism of his strictures on the congress, for we have done this abundantly heretofore. All in all, then, his address was well worth perusing.

The Union of Orthodox Congregations of America promises to wield a worldwide influence for the weal of Jewry because in the projected congress of Jews its inspiration dominates, and because it stands now, as ever in the past, for Judaism the religion. Finally, the Union has assumed a labor of transcendent importance for Judaism in that it has opened the doors of the legislative halls to those who seek to protect our traditions by the safeguards of law. We need but point to the enactment of the bill safeguarding the word Kosher which our Legislature has just passed and which is now a part of the organic law of this State. In another direction, too, the Union has put its best foot forward, as it were. A Beth Din for New York has been and is a vital necessity, and the Union has succeeded at last in bringing its establishment about. In this it will be able to avail itself of the splendid talents and wide learning of Rabbi Moses Hyamson, and, through the co-operation of the Agudas Harabonim of the rabbis of an older Weltanschauung.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Zionists Should Not Delay.

Editor HEBREW STANDARD:
I beg to use your paper for the purpose of telling the leaders of Zionism that our hopes for Palestine will be very small in case they, the leaders, should postpone their activities in the matter of a free Palestine for the Jews till the end of the European war. Nobody knows how long the great war is going to last. It looks, however, very much as if the war will be a very long one; in fact there seems to be no reason to assume that the struggle between the rulers of the several European countries should take less time than our own Civil War did. But whether the war will last several years more or only several months more, our leaders ought to know by experience that the Jews very seldom gain by waiting. We must always expect that there will most probably arrive in time some unexpected obstacle which will make impossible the realization of our hopes. It seems to me that it is the duty of our leaders to drop all other scheming and work on the assumption that if the Jews should ever get their old fatherland back as a free country it must be done at the present time, while the rulers of Europe are occupying themselves in destroying and devastating the Creator's world. The fact that our wealthy brethren are as a rule not with the Zionists must not irritate our leaders at all. The Jewish people are with them! Let our leaders only get a neutral power which would consider it as a part of its duty to mankind to render to the Jews a helping hand in this (so important for us) matter by inaugurating negotiations on the subject with Turkey, Germany, France and England, and our cause would be practically won. We must start with the following assumptions: First, that the Turks are going to lose Palestine under all conditions; second, that the Jews can never get Palestine without paying for it, and that we may better pay for the country before it is laid waste by the enemies of Turkey, and third, that in case Palestine should be made a neutral Jewish territory during the war, with the United States and Japan amongst the powers guaranteeing the neutrality of the said country, none of the belligerents will be able to invade Palestine during the war for any purpose whatever.

ISRAEL N. PRENOVICH.

The high distinction of Grand Officer of the Legion of Honor has been conferred on General Jules Heymann, whose appointment to the command of a French army corps was recently recorded. The Journal Officiel, in announcing the distinction, refers to the gallant general's services in the following terms: "He has shown in the course of the campaign, first at the head of a division and subsequently in the command of an army corps, that he possesses qualifications of great worth in a chief, adding to sound tactical knowledge and robust good sense, great firmness and very fine energy."

Three hundred ladies attended a most successful luncheon card party and dance last week at Murray's. The affair was given by the Ladies Auxiliary of the Sydenham Hospital and was in charge of Mrs. S. Frankenstein, president. The guests of honor were Mrs. S. Elkeles and Mrs. A. N. Cohen. At the guest table were Mrs. Isaac Guggenheim, honorary president; Mrs. J. Tishman, vice-president, and Mrs. Rob't Kunitzer. Among those who attended were Mesdames Morris D. Waldman, W. E. Dreyfus, A. Tischer, H. S. Simon, G. Koegler, John Sulzer, H. Mayer, H. Biscow, Monroe Hammel, S. Tuck, Miss Stella Schoenfeld and Miss Nettie Rosenstraus.

Mrs. Esther Falkenstein, pioneer Chicago settlement worker, passed away last week. She was well known by hundreds of Chicago club women, by the poor and by the children who lived about the Esther Falkenstein Settlement at 1917 North Richmond street, which was founded nine years ago. Mrs. Falkenstein was president of the Settlement Woman's Club. She was also active in the League of Cook County Clubs, and in the early days of the Woman's Party of Cook County was an official in that organization. She was a member of the City Public Welfare Bureau. A single mark of respect to the memory of Mrs. Falkenstein was the adjournment of the State Senate Thursday. The resolution calling for the adjournment was introduced by President Protempore Stephen D. Canaday of Hillsboro.

The Jewish Relief Committee at Moscow intends to raise a fund of one million roubles for the relief of the sufferers by the war. The sum of 200,000 roubles has already been collected.

On Schat-chonim.

In our advertisement of March 12th, we inadvertently used the following words:—"Rosenberg would not swear by his wife (if he had one) for all the money in the Universe." Since that day our office has been pestered by Schat-chonim who never before had us "listed"—who found their "clue" in the words "if he had one." They "cannot understand how a man who already makes a living can exist without a 'Yidde-neh.'"

During his business hours the Schat-chon is invariably accompanied by a heavy hook-handled Cane, which he permits to swing a mlessly from the wrist of the hand that is not Talking.

Schat-chonim are divided into two classes, one;—the Professional, who is in the "business" for all he can get out of it—but whose visiting cards read "Real Estate and Insurance." (Is there any Estate more Real than marriage?—And "Insurance"?—Doesn't that mean "Promises"?) His office is that of a "go-between" and once a deal is "Zu-gee-hackt," he collects his commission, congratulates himself with a "Mazel-too," and bids his client "Good-bye" forever.

The other class of Schat-chon is the "Philanthropist," the "Public Spirited Citizen" who wants to see all of humanity happy—for a commission. He is the "Gink" who has discovered the only one, the one who was especially created for your purpose, (if in the accident of events your arrival into this Cosmos had been delayed another generation, her presence here below, would have been futile and for naught). In short, "She is a regular 'Tzaatz-kee.'"

This only goes to prove what advertising will do in our business we do not use the tactics of the Schat-chon. Everything here is Right—and if it is not we make it Right for you. No disappointments and no regrets. Here you will find permanent satisfaction. That's more than the Schat-chon can "insure" for you.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

Eat plenty of fruit. The apple especially is excellent nerve food. It has more phosphoric acid in easily-digested shape than any other fruit. It excites the action of the liver, promotes sound and healthy sleep, and thoroughly disinfects the mouth. The apple also prevents indigestion and throat diseases.

It is said that if parsley is eaten with onions or a salad, the odor of the onion will not affect the breath.

Onions for Insomnia.—A safe remedy for want of sleep, and suited almost to everybody, is the eating of onions. The late Frank Buckland one said: "Everybody knows the taste of onions; this is due to a peculiar essential oil contained in this most valuable and healthy root. This oil has, I am sure, highly soporific powers. In my own case it never fails. If I am much pressed with work and feel I shall not sleep, I eat two or three small onions, and the effect is magical."

Pea-Carrot Stew.

Pour about three-quarters of a cup of Bruno's virgin olive oil into a deep sauce pan and let it come to a boil. Then add green peppers finely sliced, peas and carrots, cut twice the size of the peas. Then let them simmer for about half an hour or forty minutes, stirring every five minutes. Season with salt, pepper, and paprika. You will have a very excellent side dish to be served hot or cold.

Orange Blanc Mange.

Half cup hot water, two tablespoonsful cold water, two tablespoonsful corn starch, three tablespoonsful sugar, whites of two eggs, one-quarter cup orange cut in cubes, one-half cup orange juice, one-eighth teaspoon salt.

Mix sugar, corn starch and salt, add cold water, hot water and cook in a double boiler two hours. Cool slightly, add orange juice. Pour over stiffly beaten whites. Add pulp. Wet a ring mold with cold water, arrange sections of oranges in bottom. Pour in mixture and chill.

Jellied Fruit.

Juice and pulp of four oranges, juice of two lemons, two bananas, sliced, one cupful cold water, two cupful boiling water, one pint grape juice, two cupful sugar, one box granulated gelatine. Soak gelatine in the cold water. Add sugar to the fruit; add the grape juice; add boiling water to gelatine, stir until dissolved; add this to the fruit mixture. Pour into a glass bowl; chill. Serve with ice cream sauce: beat one egg yolk until light, and one-fourth cupful confectioner's sugar, flavoring, and one cupful whipped cream.

A Macaroni or Spaghetti Recipe.

An excellent dish may be prepared by cooking a quarter of a pound of macaroni or spaghetti in boiling salted water until tender. Drain carefully and set aside until ready to use.

Make a white sauce by blending together two tablespoonsful of butter and the same of flour, stirring them together until smoothly blended, but not brown, and cooking over a gentle heat. Add, slowly, one and one-half cups of milk, salt and pepper or paprika to taste and cook until smooth and thick; stir into the sauce two rounding tablespoons of grated cheese, then add the macaroni or spaghetti and toss about in the sauce. Turn into a greased, deep baking dish, sprinkle a further tablespoonful of cheese over the top and brown in a moderately hot oven. Serve in the dish in which it was cooked.

For the above purpose there is no better macaroni or spaghetti than Great Bear brand, which is made from pure spring water and from whole wheat exceedingly rich in gluten, grown especially for this purpose. This macaroni is made at Fulton, N. Y., in a clean American factory and leading pure food experts have unhesitatingly endorsed it.

Lemon Meringues.

Fill small cups with lemon custard (such as that used for pies). Beat whites of eggs to a stiff meringue, allowing three level tablespoonsful powdered sugar to each white. Top cups with a spoonful, dust with sugar, brown in a hot oven.

Strawberry Shortcake.

Mix and sift two cupful flour, four teaspoonsful baking powder, two teaspoonsful sugar, and one-half teaspoonful salt; then sift a second time. Work in one-fourth cupful butter, using tips of fingers, and add gradually three-fourths cupful milk. Toss on a slightly floured board and divide into two equal parts. Pat and roll and fit into two buttered round layer cake pans, shaping with back of hand to fit pans. Bake in a hot oven twelve minutes. Pick over, wash and hull strawberries, allowing one quart of berries to each shortcake. Cut berries in halves, reserving some of the choicest for garnishing, put in an earthen bowl, sprinkle with sugar, crush slightly and let stand on back of range until warmed. Split hot shortcakes and spread cut side with butter. Put one of the pieces crust side down on hot round serving dish, cover with prepared berries, then with a piece of shortcake crust side down. Cover this with prepared berries, then spread top with whipped cream sweetened and flavored with vanilla. Garnish the top with reserved whole berries.

Rice Cakes.

Sift together one pint of flour, two teaspoons of sugar, one of salt and one and a half of baking powder; beat two eggs into a half pint of milk and dilute with rice, which must be free from lumps; mix all into a smooth batter, adding a little more milk if it is too heavy and a teaspoonful of melted butter. Serve with maple syrup.

Date and Peanut Pudding.

Dates and peanuts make an exceptionally good combination. Beat two eggs well, add one cupful of granulated sugar, one cupful peanuts finely chopped, one-third of a cupful of flour sifted with one teaspoonful baking powder, and one-eighth teaspoonful of salt. Turn into a large layer cake pan, buttered and bake in a moderate oven about one hour. When cool turn out upon a flat serving dish, sprinkle with two tablespoonsful of lemon juice and cover with whipped cream.

Stuffed Celery.

Wash tender celery hearts and put them into cold water to become crisp. Mash fresh cream cheese, then add chopped nuts and chopped olives to taste. Stuff the celery just before serving and serve with toasted crackers.

Odd Use for Coffee Grounds.

Needles and pins will never rust if kept in a cushion filled with coffee grounds. Rinse the grounds in cold water, spread on a sheet of paper to dry thoroughly, and then stuff the cushion.

Grape Fruit Cocktail.

Cut grape fruit into halves, remove seeds, core and tough portions of skin; scoop out the fruit. To the pulp of each grape fruit, add the pulp of an orange, one-half banana, sliced, and two level tablespoonsful sugar. Refill the shells, add a spoonful of grape juice, and serve very cold.

Not a Fish Story.

Not in many years have kings been so much in the public eye. They are now engaged in a struggle that is depopulating their own countries and the lands of their enemies, are wrecking the nerves of people all over the world, in neutral as well as belligerent countries. There is one king in New York who is an exception. He reigns over a kingdom that is doing more to restore the nerves of the people to normal conditions than any monarch just now. It is the king of the celery trade, Geo. F. Fish, 414 West Fourteenth street, the first exclusive celery dealer in this city, and now the largest producer and distributor of celery in the United States.

Mr. Fish began in 1883 dealing in small quantities, but by painstaking industry has not only achieved phenomenal success, but he has done much to develop the industry in which so many others have prospered.

Mr. Fish supplies more celery to the leading hotels and restaurants in New York and the United States than most of the other dealers combined. He attributes his success to square dealing in supplying the best celery and careful attention to customers' wants. Mr. Fish is an authority on the culture of celery, and during his career has seen the marvelous growth in the popularity of this wonderful plant, and nowadays everybody eats celery, whereas in former years such was not the case. By purchasing in large quantities Mr. Fish was enabled to sell at low prices, and to his initiative in this respect restaurants and hotels were disposed to serve it at all dinners, thereby cultivating a taste for celery that has led to its use everywhere.

Although Mr. Fish is virtually the king of the celery trade, he wears his ermine with becoming modesty. There is no pomp or ceremony about his establishment. He is the plain unassuming marketman as of yore, strictly attentive to his business and serving his customers with regularity, promptness and at the lowest prices obtainable. It is great to be the king of celery, the food and tonic vegetable that is doing so much to counteract the ravages on the human family, caused by the king of destruction.—Adv.

SAWTAY

100% Pure Butter of Nuts, for Frying, Baking and Shortening.

Small Size, 15c.

Family Size, 35c.

The Best, Most Wholesome and Purest Nut Butter in the World, Strictly Kosher and Most Economical

SAWTAY has come like an angel from heaven to enlighten and minimize the cares of life for the Jewish housewife.

SAWTAY is best for frying, baking and shortening. It is like butter, but more pure and no danger of its spoiling.

SAWTAY solves the problem of obtaining a Kosher butter fat at a small cost.

SAWTAY costs but little, and may be used as a substitute for butter, fat or oil.

SAWTAY is Parveh, and may be used either for milk or meat dishes.

SAWTAY has no odor. You can fry herring or onions in it and use it again for baking a delicate cake.

Read the Certificate of Chief Rabbi Solomon Elchanon Jaffe:

I hereby proclaim to all the Jews of America, butter which is made from nuts and is called Sawtay, and is made by the firm "Sauté Products Corporation, Chicago, Ill." It is Kosher for all Jews and may be used for eating, frying and cooking with meat or milk, and contains nothing that conflicts with the most rigid orthodox requirements. The utensils in which Sawtay is made are all new and Kosher, making it permissible for Passover. For this reason it is recommended to the most pious and observing Jews as Kosher.

SAWTAY IS PACKED IN GLASS JARS. TRIAL SIZE, 15c. HOUSEHOLD SIZE, 35c. AND FIVE-POUND STONE CROCK, $1.15. SEND FOR "THE SAWTAY WAY," A LITTLE BOOK OF RECIPES.

1,000 Jewish Grocers, Butchers and Markets sell Sawtay in New York and Vicinity.

Borden's Malted Milk

The word "BORDEN" is all that you need to know when you want to have the genuine, Kosher, pure, clean and wholesome MALTED MILK.

There has now appeared upon the market an imitation MALTED MILK, which some dealers desire to substitute for the BORDEN'S MALTED MILK, because it costs them only one half as much as BORDEN'S.

See that you are not misled. Insist upon the name BORDEN'S. See that this name is on every package or jar and that BORDEN'S is served to you at the soda fountain.

BORDEN'S MALTED MILK has no equal in the world for quality and cleanliness.

BORDEN'S name on a jar of MALTED MILK is like the United States' seal on gold coin.

$100 Reward will be paid to any person causing the arrest and conviction of any person, firm or corporation who may be found selling any substance which is not genuine as for BORDEN'S MALTED MILK.

Ask for BORDEN'S MALTED MILK. Buy only BORDEN'S MALTED MILK. Accept no substitutes.

IT IS QUALITY THAT COUNTS.

When we speak of pure milk and pure milk products, unconsciously the word "Borden" comes to your mind. It has been for long over half a century a household word for all that was clean in milk.

The BORDEN'S CONDENSED MILK COMPANY recognized long ago the possibility of educating the Jewish people regarding the use of Condensed and Evaporated Milk as a household necessity, but at the same time appreciated the difficulties that would have to be overcome on account of a possible conflict with the Jewish dietary regulations.

Accordingly, to overcome all obstacles and eliminate any criticism that might be made, they placed their entire plant at Norwich, N. Y., under the personal supervision of Chief Rabbi Solomon Elchanon Jaffe, who has installed at this plant a system of absolute Kashruth. Here are made, under the strictest rabbinical supervision, the three famous brands—GAIL BORDEN'S KOSHER EAGLE BRAND CONDENSED MILK AND MAGNOLIA BRAND CONDENSED MILK AND BORDEN'S KOSHER EVAPORATED MILK. They are put up under the seal of the Chief Rabbi, and any Jewish housewife need have no fear in purchasing a can at her grocer's and using it for any purpose that ordinary milk is used.

HEBREW STANDARD readers know Chief Rabbi Jaffe's indorsement means a great deal, especially when it is applied to a food that is to supply your children strong and healthy bodies, which thereby develop into robust womanhood and manhood. Why not try a can of these brands with Rabbi Jaffe's indorsement? They cost no more than other brands, and the Magnolia Brand labels can be redeemed for handsome presents.—Adv.

A report is current in Petrograd that, disregarding the recommendation of the Conference of Curators, the Minister of Education has decided to abolish the ballot for the admission of Jews to schools. The government has also decided to permit Jewish delegates to the Exchange Conference to make a stay in Petrograd. On the other hand, a military order has suddenly been issued forbidding Jews to stay at the resorts on the Finnish coast and round Kronstadt.

Jews in Argentina.
There are a large number of colonies in Argentina. Among the most interesting of such settlements, says Frank G. Carpenter, are those belonging to Hebrews. It will be remembered that Baron Hirsch set aside $10,000,000 some years ago to assist the Jews to leave Russia. He sent his agents to Argentina and they bought a tract of good bottom land, comprising about 30,000,000 acres. For this they paid something like $12,000 or $15,000 per square league, and the total sum expended for the land amounted to more than $2,000,000. The Jewish Colonization Fund has aided in this work and there are now something like 40,000 Jews in Argentina. Some of them are settled in villages and they own large areas of farming lands near by. They have social communities and go out to work on the farms. Many of them own their lands in severalty, and some of the villages have 3,000 or 4,000 population. Not a few of these people have established stores in different parts of Argentina, and there are now Jewish merchants everywhere. Some of the Jews are quite wealthy. The grain trade is largely controlled by them, and they have shown the same thrift that is common to their race the world over.

Dietary Laws and Holiness.
The observance of the dietary laws makes for holiness, because it makes us conscious of our spiritual relations in the act of administering to our physical needs. Society has always sought to dignify the act of eating by imposing the social restraints of table manners. Judaism goes a step further by imposing a religious etiquette of diet, which keeps us in mind of the moral purposes to which the animal appetites must be subjected. The dietary laws further the ideal of holiness also by development of that self-control which is essential to the moral life. The best way to further self-control is by multiplying the occasions for its practice. In that subjection of the appetite to the will, which is made necessary by the observance of these laws, we have a potent factor in the development of those characteristic virtues of temperance and continuance, which distinguish the Jew wherever he has not departed from traditional standards. Finally the observance of the dietary laws keeps the Jew in mind of his Jewish affiliation. It is part of the priestly rule of a nation of priests, calling for attention to all the laws associated with it by being included in the Torah. It is a symbolic acknowledgment of the Jew's determination to be guided in life by the rule of that revelation to which he stands historically committed.—Rabbi Eugene Kohn, Baltimore, Md.

To Israel Zangwill.
 From America. By Harry Harman.
 Thou who alone of all our race speakest the godly word,
 O let thy voice be heard,
 And waken the souls that rot in ease.
 Behold the hosts of Night have come
 With voiceless cry and muffled drum,
 And we are blind and we are dumb!
 Send us a word across the seas!

Are there not woes unwept, unsung,
 Prince of our throneless race?
 Is there no touch of grace
 In our soul-sickness thee to please?
 We languish on the restless shore,
 Stiff, hardened with our wounds of yore,
 And daily rot we more and more!
 Send us a word across the seas!

Hushed is the world-din in our ears, void is our exile land!
 One-armed, one-souled we stand
 Purposeless winds their wailing cease!
 Voice of our distant, dust-choked past,
 Our arms, our souls, are steeled at last
 To hear the shrill, blood-waking blast
 That thou shalt send across the seas.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Plainfield, N. J.

Editor HEBREW STANDARD:
 In the course of his continuous travels and extensive itineraries, your correspondent halted recently at the city of Plainfield, in the neighboring State of New Jersey. The latter's slogan being Liberty and the shibboleth Prosperity, the visitor was delighted to see and behold Jews and Jewesses parading and demonstrating their Judaism and Jewishness, those terms and dicta turning identical, indeed, with liberty and prosperity, for thus say the Rabbis: "No man is free but he who labors in the Law" (Ethics vi. 2), and concerning wisdom, knowledge and the law. Solomon ventured to state that they are "More precious than pearls and all the objects that one values would never equal them" (Proverbs iii. 15).

Some ten years ago, visiting the town first, your humble servant found but stagnation, dormancy and inactivity, one synagogue being missioned and commissioned into insignificant expedience and small potency, the precincts and provinces of which falling to open for ventilation, light and learning. Now there are signs and sights of improvement, advancement and vitality among Plainfield's sons and daughters of the Patriarchs and the Matriarchs. The synagogue of B'nai Israel gave birth to two more places of worship, conservative and reform, respectively. There is also a Young Men's Hebrew Association, a Zionist society, a Hebrew school and kindred institutions of religious, eleemosynary and social nature.

Mr. M. Abrams retires from the presidency of B'nai Israel Congregation, Mr. Harry Perlman undertaking the task of filling the vacancy with dignity and agency, his own overtaxed duties and imposed obligations notwithstanding.

Bella is the name of the newly-born daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Katz, given last Saturday at the B'nai Israel Synagogue, in the progress of the Sabbath services, the father donating liberally to local, national and international institutions of charity, religion and education.

Rev. Dr. A. Kahn is the principal of the Hebrew school and Rev. Max Davidson is the minister of B'nai Israel. While in Plainfield the writer of this correspondence was domiciled with the Rev. Mr. Davidson, the latter, his wife and his children proving indeed hospitable and courteous. NACHMAN HELLER.

Watch for the Opening of Our Summer Garden

Djermal Pasha, who was responsible for the recent oppressive policy against the Palestinian Jews, has changed his front as a result of American and Italian pressure. On his way to Constantinople he visited the Jaffa Gymnasium and informed the director that the repression was the result of a misunderstanding. In the presence of Dr. Mossinson and M. Disenhoff he warned the local Kaimakam that this official would be put on his trial for any repetition of seizure of property or oppression of the people. The other authorities were also informed that heavy punishment would follow any attempt to disturb the peace.

The late Mr. Eugenio Joseph Arbib has bequeathed $60,000 to the London (England) Portuguese Jewish Board of Guardians, in trust for the poor Jews in Tripoli, his native place, and if the board accepts the trust a further $60,000 for its own general purpose.

Does the road wind up hill all the way? Yes, to the very end.
Will the day's journey take the whole day long? From morn to night, my friend.
—Christina G. Rossetti.

Summering in America.

"Summers 'Made in America' are going to be all the rage this year," remarked Mr. L. E. Parent of Parent & Richards, proprietors of Hotel Kaaterskill, one day last week. "Judging from our unprecedentedly heavy bookings for the Kaaterskill. We never had such a rush for reservations so early in the season. Home made climate will be patronized by all of our most distinguished families, who seem to have decided that our American Alps will be much pleasanter and more peaceful retreats—cooler in every sense of the word—than their European prototype, which have been the accustomed Mecca of summer pilgrimages in former years.

"We have booked whole families for the entire season, who have spent the summer for the last decade abroad. So numerous are these patrons who have been accustomed to every luxury that wealth can afford, that we have been forced to put in a number of new baths and in other ways prepare for the rush. We expect to run to full capacity, and that is going some, since the Kaaterskill is the largest mountain resort in America, if not in the world—accommodating 1,200 people."

"I thought we had a Belgian refugee on our hands yesterday," smilingly put in Mr. Richards, who has the booking office in charge. "I don't claim to do any plain and fancy stunts as a linguist, so when this tall, dark, sinister-eyed stranger walked in on me and began to shout into my face, with the help of his hands, shoulders and his entire working outfit of facial expression, I began to look around uneasily for the nearest exit—which, by the way, was permanently barred by my visitor's bulky person. He came closer, shouting louder and growing purple with either violent emotion of effort, I couldn't tell which. Fortunately, Mr. Parent entered at this alarming juncture and said casually, 'Bon jour Monsieur!' 'The look of unutterable joy that came over the stranger's distressed face was that of a mother who had just found her long-lost child. He screeched out, 'Oh, merci a le bon Dieu!—Vous parlez Français!' and threw his arms around Mr. Parent, much to the later's embarrassment and the enjoyment of several onlookers.

"With tears in his voice he jabbered away, beating the speed limit. At the end of five minutes I learned to my great relief that he was only an opera singer whose first season in America was over and who desired a room and bath at the Kaaterskill in order to join a number of his compatriots who are to be with us this summer, rather than venture across the dangerous ocean to risk their persons and precious voices in the war zones of Europe."—Adv.

CHILDREN'S PAGE

RABBI JOSHUA BEN LEVI

Dear Children:

After Elijah the Prophet and Rabbi Joshua Ben Levi had traveled all day they came to a very large synagogue, where the members of the congregation sat in seats made of gold and silver. On their arrival one of the members asked, "Who is going to feed these poor people this evening?" to which another replied, "Let some bread, water and salt be brought them here, and that will be enough for them." Thus they treated them with scant courtesy. After spending the night there they arose in the morning and took their departure. Before leaving Elijah said to the congregation: "May you all be presidents!" The rabbi, with a heavy heart, sadly perplexed, but not daring to ask any questions, again walked with the Prophet an entire day, until they reached a certain city at sundown. When the Jewish community of that city beheld them from afar they went forth to meet them. They greeted them with a hearty welcome and received them with manifestations of joy. They brought them to the house of the most prominent member of their community, where they ate and drank and lodged with great honor. When they arose in the morning Elijah prayed and said: "May the Lord give you one president." When Rabbi Joshua heard these words he could contain himself no longer, and he said to Elijah: "Explain to me the mysteries of your strange actions," to which Elijah replied, "If you wish to leave me I will reveal those secrets to you. Know, then, that the man whose cow I have killed—on that very day it was destined that his wife should die. Therefore I prayed to the Almighty that he should 'take away his cow as a ransom for the soul of his wife. I also saw that his wife would yet bring happiness and prosperity to his house." As to the rich man whose wall I have built, had I left it for him to build he would, upon digging the foundation, have discovered a great treasure of gold and silver. Therefore I have built it, but it will soon fall and he will not build it again. And the men concerning whom I prayed that they have many leaders, that was for their evil, that they may be disrupted through their great dissension, for wherever there are many leaders disorganization and ruin is the result. On the other hand, the community for which I prayed that they may have but one president, it was for their good that I have done so in order that they be well established in good counsel, with peace and harmony, for having one leader to whom they can look up to with confidence and joy. The spirit of dissension will not come among them; good counsel will prevail and their organization will be firm and prosperous, for thus runs the proverb: 'Too many captains sink the ship.' But with one 'Minyan' (a united community) the city becomes established." After explaining all his actions Elijah said to him: "I am now leaving you, but I will first tell you something that will benefit you to know: If you see a wicked person who is favored by fortune, let not the evil imagination mislead you nor cause you to be astonished, for it is for his harm; and if you see a righteous person in distress passing his existence in hunger and want or afflicted by sickness and trouble, let not your spirit be vexed nor the evil imagination mislead you to think doubtfully of your Creator; but rest assured that the Lord is righteous and His judgment is just and His eyes are upon the ways of every man, and who will say unto him, 'What doest thou?'"

They then bade each other farewell and Elijah took his departure. "When the time came for Rabbi Joshua Ben Levi to depart this life," the Rabbins tell us in their beautiful imagery, "the Holy One, blessed be He, said to the Angel of Death, 'Go to him and do what he orders you to do.'" The Angel or Death thereupon appeared to Rabbi Joshua Ben Levi and said: "I came to do thy bidding." "Take me to Gan Eden (Paradise)," said the rabbi, "and show me my place there." "I swear by my life I will do so," said the angel, "Give me your sword, lest you terrify me on the day," demanded Rabbi Joshua Ben Levi. The Angel of Death gave it to him, then led him to Gan Eden. When they arrived there Rabbi Joshua Ben Levi leaped into Paradise.
