The Jewish Regiment

By SAMUEL ROTH

Grigory Miklitch, sub-lieutenant in the Thirteenth Regiment of the southwestern wing of the Russian Imperial Army, saw the prisoner brought into his tent, then motioned the stout corporal and his guard to leave. The prisoner, a man of about forty, tall, bronze-faced, clean-shaven, with piercing black eyes, seemed to enjoy extraordinary self-possession. He sat down without invitation, and helped himself to a cigar lying on the table. The officer placed himself opposite him, smiled slightly, and said: "Koenig, I have had you brought here for a particular reason."

Koenig puffed out a thin cloud of smoke and gazed at the sub-lieutenant keenly. "Perhaps you had better enlighten me first of all why I've been placed under guard?"

Grigory did not change countenance. "You're too impudent," he replied.

The prisoner elevated his dark brows.

"I don't mean that you've done anything here," the officer continued hastily. "But the moment they placed you under my command I began to lose confidence in myself. 'Grigory,' something seemed to whisper in my ear, 'there is a man who will weaken thy prestige among the soldiers.' And that's exactly what you have done. Not conspicuously, of course. But your manner, the tone of your voice, your unbearable contempt which must show itself everywhere and at all times—these things would have had a bad influence on the men. I believe in thorough discipline, and my placing you under guard was a purely disciplinary measure, you understand. I've been sorry to lose your services all the same. You were the best shot at the university, and most of the men can't hit the side of a house. But I tell you it was the only proper thing for me to do with you. Now, the very first day you came here I ordered 'Slope arms'; you obeyed, but I saw you glance at me, and I wanted to turn away. I'd much rather you'd point your gun at me than look that way."

A smile of amusement flickered around the thin even lips of the prisoner. "Well, what is it you intend to do?" he asked.

"As I mentioned before, I have had you brought here for a particular reason." The Russian officer leaned forward slightly and gazed more intently at his inferior.

Koenig held the smoking cigar between his finger. "Yes?"

"Here is the situation, Koenig. The Austrian pressure on our lines has become unbearable. There is only one thing to be done. We must attack their western wing. These are the orders of the colonel. There are a number of occasions, and I know the ground perfectly. I have volunteered to obtain the desired information. You are coming with me."

Koenig exhaled a cloud of smoke and nodded silently.

"Now, mind you, Koenig, this is not by any means an order. "I can officer was capable of it. Of course, I'm going. But what made you so certain before that you said: 'You are coming with me?'"

Grigory laughed. "There was no possibility of your refusing. Not that you're really brave. You're a Jew, and stubborn."

both brave and brilliant without really being either. Don't I remember you and your friends at the university? Witty in conversation and masters with the foil. But what does that prove? Nothing! If you Jews were worth a pinch of salt you would take your place among the nations and protect yourselves against your enemies as Belgium is doing today."

Peasant's clothes and disguises were brought them. Ten minutes later two men who appeared like old farmers on a vacation passed through the lines and out into the woods beyond.

After more than two hours of swift walking they came in sight of a hill, a rather rocky, slightly wooded affair that to Grigory's practiced eye appeared like something besides an ordinary hill. "Masked guns!" he whispered in the ear of his companion.

They assumed a slower gait that was more in keeping with their disguise, and, keeping within good distance of the hill, circumspected it. "Devil seize these Austrians!" Grigory muttered between his teeth. "We've been under the impression that they were at least three miles from here. It's terrible how quickly they have been moving. It's ridiculous. Why we can cut them off now so that not a single one of them should escape!" He was doing some rapid sketching with his pencil on a piece of paper which was constantly coming up and down his sleeve.

Suddenly there was a stirring in the bushes. They turned round and found themselves looking at fifteen pointed bayonets sticking out of the thicket. Simultaneously, a soldier in Austrian uniform, a young man emerged from behind the foliage, musket in hand, and walked up to them: "You will please disarm, gentlemen."

Koenig regarded the erect young Austrian with mild astonishment. "David," he said placidly, "I never dreamt you would make such an excellent soldier!"

David turned sharply toward Koenig, who, with a movement of his hand, had peeled the disguise from his face. "Is that you, master?" he cried, embracing him.

The other men who had stepped out of the bushes seized the sub-lieutenant and bound his wrists. One by one they recognized Koenig and embraced him affectionately.

"Master!" David had suddenly turned toward Koenig and was gaz-

Koenig smiled genially. "I congratulate you on your humaneness, Grigory. I didn't know a Russian Koenig gazed critically at the sub-lieutenant as the latter rose from the table.

"You have not abandoned this absurd notion of yours yet, Grigory?"

"It is not absurd. It's the truth. A Jew can make a show of being in the Thirteenth Regiment of the Russian Imperial Army."

"And what were you doing when you were found near the lines?"

"Searching out a path by which to advance."

Green now addressed himself to Koenig. "Your name, sir?"

"Max Koenig. Private of the same regiment."

"And what were you doing near the lines?"

"Locating your position, sir."

Green's gray eyes met the dark eyes of Koenig for only a second, but neither spoke a word.

Green suddenly turned sharply to the guard. "Take these spies in charge!"

Koenig and his superior officer were placed in a tent by themselves and a guard of five men was placed over them.

"Captain," called Koenig a few minutes later as he saw Green passing.

Green paused.

"Won't you be good and lend me your pipe and tobacco. I'll consider it a real favor."

Green nodded slightly and walked on.

Koenig turned to Grigory. "Well what do you think of Jews as soldiers now, eh, Grigory?"

Grigory only glared fiercely in return. "I never thought you could prove such a traitorous wretch, Koenig!"

Koenig elevated his eyebrows. "How have I betrayed you?" he asked.

"By telling them that we were spying."

"Well, weren't we?"

"But there was no need of telling it to them!"

"Did you expect me to lie to them Grigory?"

"Why not? Isn't it a matter of life to us?"

"You're right there Grigory. But can't you understand that it was impossible for me to lie to these men?"

Why, they're old comrades of mine and I have led them for many years in the one great hope which illumined their lives. It was I who first aroused the fighting spirit in David Green and we have been rivals for leadership in our ranks for years. Do you think it was possible for me to lie to them?"

"At any rate you were safe in telling the truth," said Grigory, disdainfully.

"What do you mean?" Koenig's color was rising in his cheeks.

"You know very well what I mean," Grigory said, significantly.

"Your friends will surely not punish you, whereas I know what they will do to me."

"You lie, Grigory," Koenig retorted, calmly. "Captain Green is an officer in the Austrian army and he will treat me as a Russian spy."

Grigory smiled skeptically.

Just then David entered with pipe and tobacco. He sat down opposite Koenig and watched the latter calmly fill the pipe and smoke up as though he were sitting back in the old meeting locals in the home town formulating plans for the cause.

"Well, David, what have you to say?"

David shook his head. "Green is acting as though he were ill. We don't know what has possessed him. He's flung one of the guard clear out of his tent. We never knew him to be violent before."

"What do you think has happened?"

David bit his lips and riveted his eyes on the floor.

"I think I know what ails him, David," Koenig said after a moment of thought. "Go to him, David, and tell him that I said I am willing."

David's face paled. "What does that mean?"

"Tell him that," said Koenig, impatiently. "If he's a real soldier he'll understand. Tell him I said that, too."

Meanwhile night was slowly descending into the valley. The voices of the soldiers grew less and less. Soon only the sharp hails of the sentry broke the silence at regular intervals. One of the guards brought them food. They ate without exchanging a word.

When they had finished another guard presented himself and summoned Koenig.

It was a cool, clear moonlit night. The breath of the awakened hills was strong and exhilarating. The soldiers had built a modest fire behind an immense boulder on the side of the hill, and thither Koenig was led.

He found Green and about twelve of his old comrades seated silently about the fire. He sat down among them. "Well, Koenig, what have you to say?" one of them asked.

He gazed at them gravely. "What can I say, comrades? We're in war. At home they have pulled down our houses, upset the cradles of our babes and driven our sisters and our brides into shame and exile. And we—we are fighting, fighting royally! God! if we only were fighting for a cause!"

Green arose calmly and said with eyes burning: "We are fighting for Austria!"

Koenig smiled at him. "And I am fighting for Russia," he said.

Green colored, sat down tremblingly, and turned his face from the fire.

David clutched Koenig's arm. "Don't, master!" he whispered. "Can't you understand our position?"

Koenig's eyes lit with affectionate admiration at sight of the young form of David so sensitive to military duty. He stretched his hand forth lightly as though to warm them by the fire. "Gentlemen, why so gloomy?" he inquired. "How about some of our old Hebrew songs? Come, David; you have a good voice."

Herbert Samuel Easily Navigates Contested By-Election and Returns to Cabinet—Recruiting Boom Under Lord Derby's Scheme—Scenes at Rothschild's Bank—Important Legacies to Jewish Charities in London—B'nai B'rith and New Scheme for Social Service—Zangwill Among the Fabians—Tales of Jewish Graves.

London, Dec. 16, 1915.

There was never any doubt here as to what the result of the by-election in the Cleveland division would be, but the figures which showed that Herbert Samuel had retained his seat by a majority of five to one were received with general gratification. They would have been welcomed in any case as an indication of the overwhelming strength of the support which the country as a whole is giving to the government, but they were specially welcome in association with Herbert Samuel's return to the Cabinet. Not every Minister who was called upon to make sacrifice in the interests of the country showed the same readiness and reticence which characterized Mr. Samuel's attitude. He was loyal enough to step quietly and cheerfully down from the Cabinet rank when it became necessary to make room for the Unionist Ministers under the coalition scheme. He made no "personal explanations" to the House, and he gave no hint of grievances in the matter, thereby giving a good example to a good many other important but disgruntled politicians. The House notices these things, though it may say little, and they undoubtedly contributed to increase the universal respect which Samuel's ability and personality have won. His return to the Cabinet was universally approved as adding to its effective business strength.

The recruiting scheme inaugurated by Lord Derby and generally known, therefore, as the Derby scheme, closed up Saturday, the last few days having been marked by an enormous rush of recruits—a rush so great as to practically overwhelm the voluntary and paid workers in the recruiting offices. In some cases these had to be kept open the best part of the night on several occasions to satisfy the long queues of men waiting to attest for enlistment. An instance of the state of affairs in the city is that at Rothschild's bank, where recruiting is going on, it took seven hours' waiting before a man could come before the examiner, even though the medical examinations were deferred to another occasion. The total number of "Derby recruits" is not yet known, but it is believed to be somewhere between two and three millions, judging by the tremendous scenes witnessed last week. Of course not all these will go to the front or even become soldiers. A certain scheme will have to be put on foot and where the attestors are found to be indispensable for the business they are engaged in they will be exempted. To illustrate this, there is one case which is by no means exceptional and which came to my attention today. Two men of a little over thirty, who are the partners of a publishing firm which has made a high name for itself, attested. If they both go the business will at once stop, for it cannot be carried on by any one else. They had two assistants at the beginning of the war. One was killed in the first few months when serving as a lieutenant in the Third Hussars. The death of the other at the front was in the casualty list last week. They have only one male packer left, and all the rest of their staff are women who have not had time to get a grasp of their work. If some of the twelfth-hour enlistees are called up at once a good many London businesses will not be able to continue.

Adolphe Haendler, of Paris, who died on May 11, left an estate in the United Kingdom valued at $940,104.66. Probate of his will has just been granted to M. Robert Revel, of Paris, notary. The testator left $20,000 to the Comité de Bienfaisance Israelite, Paris; $20,000 to the Jewish Normal School, 45, Rue Labruyere, Paris; $10,000 to the Board of Guardians for the Relief of Jewish Poor, London; $20,000 to the Jewish Temporary Shelter, Lemans street, White-chapel; $20,000 to the Jewish Charitable Committee of London. After other large bequests, he left the residue of his estate to the Jewish community in London to be set apart for a work bearing the names of Nathan and Adolphe Haendler, the income of which is to be used to assist poor Jews who, in consequence of religious persecution or other misfortunes, take refuge in England.

By his will he had made bequests to the Hilfsverein der Deutschen Juden, of Berlin, but these are revoked by a codicil made in April this year.

These are great days for progressive voluntary social service and it is not surprising to find the B'nai B'rith settling about establishing a Jewish Bureau of Social Service. This important step is all the more noteworthy because of the fact that quite a large number of Jewish institutions experience great difficulty in recruiting suitable voluntary social workers. It is equally a fact that many Jewish men and women are willing and anxious to undertake some form of work, but do not know the particular sphere of activity in which their services would be most acceptable, or for which their qualifications render them the most suitable. It will be the chief object of the bureau to bring the would-be workers and the institutions requiring their services into touch with one another. It is proposed to issue monthly a statement showing the vacancies for voluntary workers that exist. This statement will be communicated to the press and distributed among the clergy and other persons likely to come into contact with suitable recruits. It is also proposed to publish leaflets describing various forms of social service for which there is a constant demand for workers. Recruits will be interviewed by representatives of the bureau, accommodation having been kindly provided for this purpose by the British Institute of Social Service at Westminster (close to the abbey). One of the subsidiary objects of the bureau will be to collect a library relating to Jewish social service in London, which will be a useful adjunct to the valuable collection in the library of the British Institute.

The Fabian Society was at one time in this country quite a revolutionary body, its members being entirely middle class Socialists. It was a function of the Fabian Society to supply the intellectual and "faddist" side of the otherwise working class movement. George Bernard Shaw, the famous dramatist, is one of its most famous members, while half a dozen other names of national and in some cases world-wide importance could be found in its old or current membership. Quite a breeze took place at the last weekly meeting of the society. Israel Zangwill in the course of an address attacked Russia very severely for her treatment of the Jews. He dealt upon the disabilities of the Jews in that country and the cruelties to which they have been subjected during the war. He was not, he said, however, pessimistic about the Jewish position, seeing that the best intellects in Russia were favoring equal rights for Jews, and if Sir Edward Grey were to blow the trumpet the walls of Jericho would fall.

Cecil Chesterton, who is the lesser known brother of the famous essayist and orator, Gilbert Keith Chesterton, took part in the debate which followed Zangwill's address and protested against Zangwill's reference to Russia, remarking that he ought to be shot for speaking as he did of England's ally. Chesterton, who, by the way, is one of our English anti-Semites, got very short shrift from the speakers who followed. George Bernard Shaw, who was in attendance, said that if Zangwill ought to be shot he, Shaw, deserved the same fate, for he, too, was opposed to the Russian Government and its persecution of the Jews. H. M. Hyndman, another well known old Socialist leader here, also protested against the criticism of Zangwill.

An interesting story is told by Mr. Adler, the Jewish chaplain in France. Whilst traveling to and fro about the western front, he came across at the side of a country lane a solitary grave which proved to be that of a Jewish officer, Lieutenant A. M. Samuels, of the Royal Irish Fusiliers, who had been killed in a skirmish in October, 1914. Arrangements have now been made for the authorized Jewish memorial to be set up over the grave. In this connection, an incident with reference to the grave of a Jewish soldier is worth recording. When Sapper B. Stander died of wounds a few months ago in a certain hospital, his friends of the R. I. got up a specially made cross to which the senior chaplain added the Jewish memorial. On revisiting the grave recently, Mr. Adler found that both the cross and the memorial had been removed, and in their place the engineers had erected an elaborately carved Mogen David, inscribed with the name of the dead soldier, in this way demonstrating the regard in which he was and continues to be held by his comrades. This incident is but one of a large number which have come to the knowledge of the senior chaplain illustrating the happy and cordial relations that exist among all soldiers at the front. Mr. Adler is now removing to the area of the third army, and Mr. Simmons is proceeding to Rouen.

SALONIKI.

By NACHMAN HELLER.

In the midst of the universal war, among metropolitan cities and provincial towns, where military operations threaten the safety of the inhabitants and the future of the populace, the city of Saloniki towers above all other centers. Saloniki has, as a matter of record, its own tale of woe to tell of its former glory when under the Turkish Government, which was transformed into misery and wretchedness at the time the Greeks took possession of the coveted city as spoil and prey of the recent Balkan hostilities. Saloniki harbors a large number of Jews, cultured and refined, because of which its fortune or misfortune appeals to the hearts and minds of the Jews all the world over, geographical divisions and equate separations notwithstanding. For scores and decades of years, Saloniki was the very haven of peace and harmony, strife and friction never having entered its portals, the residents and townspeople following their respective avocations and pursuing the ordinary routine of commerce and industry. Prosperity and abundance reigned supreme. But constant monotony and continuous uniformity turn one into stages of melancholy and states of gloominess. The mood became pensive and the humor dreary. People took to politics. The Young Turks entrenched themselves there, whence they marched courageously and boldly toward Constantinople to depose the Sultan Abdul Hamid, taking the latter with them and keeping him safely in the very city of Saloniki.

Of small beginnings, Saloniki turned quickly the bone of contention for each and every one of the Balkan allies, Bulgaria and Greece casting yearning eyes upon it, in the course of their war with Turkey. Greece turned victorious, the Congress in Bucharest recognized the Grecian seizure, ignoring entirely Bulgarian claims and pleas. But then, who knows what the outcome of the present great war has in store for Saloniki? It is but fresh in one's memory the injustice, ill-treatment and treachery dealt with Bulgaria by its former allies, and Bulgaria's alliance with Austrian-German forces may cause a change of ownership of Saloniki, a late reward for a former punishment, Greece's wavering adding, indeed, fuel to the flames.

Forming four-fifths of the population the Jews did before the Greeks' occupation of Saloniki, small wonder then that Israel Zangwill, the famous novelist and president of the territorial movement, proposed Saloniki as the nucleus for a Jewish state, and had Lord Beaconsfield, the Jewish Benjamin d'Israeli, been then among the living, Zangwill's dream might have turned into an actual fact. It goes without saying the Jews were never given Saloniki as their own national property. A goodly number of Jews emigrated to Spain, Palestine and the United States. The bulk of the Jews, however, remained in Saloniki just the same, despite the open hostility and the intense animosity manifested continuously by the invading Greeks.

Situated at the waterfront, the harbor presents a picturesque appearance, its beauties and niceties dating back to prehistoric days, when gods and goddesses indulged in baptismal practices and underwent the processes of immersion. It was built by Kasandros, the King of Macedonia, its name being but the very abbreviation of his wife Thesalonika, the sister of Alexander the Great. It had seen many masters since its birth and origin, the Romans, Greeks, Venetians and Turks changing fronts alternately. Saloniki may boast of having harbored the first Christian community in the Orient, with the overthrow, however, of the Christian rulers, Islam became the recognized religion, changing the churches into mosques, the practice experienced in Constantinople and other conquered cities. But then God is only one for Jew, Moslem and Christian alike, the changing of hands and the transferring of the forms of prayer and orders of meditations are but childish pranks and puerile stunts to Him, the father of all mankind.

There are no architectural work and magnificent monuments of any value exhibited in Saloniki, the fighting hosts having, apparently, destroyed the traces and relics of erstwhile splendor and whilom beauty. On the other hand, huts and shanties, representing ante-diluvian days and old-fashioned simplicity arrest one's attention. Old and new, ancient and modern, Orient and Occident, join forces and clasp hands at the docks, where thousands of steamers are being loaded and unloaded continuously, the losses of other seaports in the war zone proving Saloniki's gain and Greece's neutrality enlarged the traffic considerably.

Observing the standstill and the respite that the business world takes in Saloniki on the twenty-four hours, between Friday evening and Saturday, when Jewish men of labor and commerce take a complete rest and celebrate their Sabbath, one recalls indeed, the propriety and good judgment of Zangwill, who agitated for a Jewish Saloniki, which is spiritually Jewish just the same, whether recognized and sanctioned by authorities or not. There and then, the Saloniki Jews display their national stiff-neckedness, Maccabean backbone and Israel's self-respect. Saloniki Jews are, indeed, the best Jews of the world, both religious and physical, and it is delightful and satisfactory to see and behold strong and muscular men and healthy and beautiful women walking in long processions on the Sabbath to the synagogues for divine services. One must bear in mind that Saloniki is not an obscure corner and a dormant village in God's great universe. Saloniki is a European metropolis, on a par with London, Hamburg and Antwerp, where the various nations and sundry denominations come in contact with one another, and while Jewries of all other sections of the world are confronted with the writing on the wall, desecrating the Sabbaths and defiling the festivals, the Saloniki Jews emerge triumphant and glorious, shedding thus luster upon their brethren in faith and casting honor upon the remnant of Israel.

There are, likewise, a group of Jewish-Mohammedans, numbering about 2,000 souls, descended from the disciples and followers of the pseudo Messiah, Sabati Zebi, who converted to the Islamic creed to save his life. They are ostracized by both Jews and Mohammedans alike, building thus a separate community, though their relations to the Jews are not hostile, a fact that one scarcely finds among Christian converts.

Saloniki became a refuge for both Jewish people and Jewish learning, thousands of Spanish and Jewish Marranos fled thither for safety and protection, escaping this wise from the clutches of the inquisition and the auto-de-fe, while numerous books and volumes on all branches of Jewish science were published at Saloniki. The war and its atrocious results is approaching this historic city also and one wonders what will be the fate of its populace in general, and the Jews in

An hour later Green arose and ordered the men back to their places. "I will myself escort the prisoner to the guard," he said.

When the men had gone, Green turned to Koenig and said: "Koenig, you know you're held among us as a spy."

Koenig nodded. "And you know what military law bids me do in that case?" Again Koenig nodded.

"Koenig, we can't and we won't do that, do you understand? And so there is only one thing to be done."

"What is that?" "You must get away from here," said Green.

"And what about the officer?" A pause. "I suppose we must let him go, too."

"And have your regiment cut to pieces as a consequence, Green?" Green was silent.

Koenig suddenly seized the captain's arm tightly. "Green," he said, in a hard, stern tone of voice, "do you know that the blackest and most serious charge laid at the door of our people throughout all these centuries of exile was that we are not capable of being strong, loyal soldiers?" Green nodded.

"And you know that it's an infernal lie, don't you?" Again the captain nodded.

"You will prove that tomorrow morning."

They walked on toward the guard in silence. For a whole minute before parting their hands were clasped, and for a whole minute that was

In order to insure the insertion of communications in the current issue of THE HEBREW STANDARD they must be in this office not later than Wednesday 10 a. m. of the week in which they are to appear.

The Zion Mule Corps of the British army is, indeed, a Jewish unit. The words of military command are given therein in Hebrew!

The best answer to attacks on the Jews and Judaism is to deepen and vitalize the traditional religious consciousness of the Jews, not to appeal to or attempt to quicken their love of the monotheistic conception in the abstract.

We note with interest that the issue of the New Yorker Staats-Zeitung of Wednesday week did not find space for even a word about the great Carnegie Hall meeting of the American Relief Committee of the previous evening. Comments!

Warton and Bernard Shaw! What a trio! Their presence at a recent meeting of the American Relief Committee, says the New Yorker.

...and noisy persons... and effectively given to such it will be... when others, neither foolish, ignorant, will take up what they have said and passed, tolerant and reserved. "If you would for war!"

While... is a cruel calumny, the representatives of Anglo-... must ever be on the alert promptly and vigorously to... it when and wherever it lifts its filthy head.

Every little while, at one assembly of the Jewish Chautauqua Society or the other, the suggestion is advanced, as if it were a novel one, that Jewish history and Jewish literature are worthy a place in the curricula of our universities and colleges. The most recent instance of the presentation of this plea is afforded by the St. Louis meeting of the Chautauqua last week. The plea deserves to be well taken; no successful argument in opposition thereto can be advanced. Why, then, does not the Chautauqua bring home its plea to the universities and colleges more directly?

The Jews of Germany appear to have had to wait for the great war to take a deeper interest in their co-religionists in the Turkish Empire. At least such is the impression we derive from a perusal of the reports that a new German Israelite-Osmanic Union has been organized. The motive behind the formation of this new body is not far to seek, and its purpose, noble and salutary in itself, takes on a new meaning by reason of the developments in the European world at large since the last days of July of 1914. Our one regret is that non-Jewish events and interests led to the establishment of this new association, which could well have been created years ago through purely Jewish needs and desires.

WESTERN JUSTICE AND THE JEW

WE had occasion quite recently in this place to refer in approving terms to the action of Mr. Justice Ford, of the local Supreme Court, in declaring an action before him a mistrial because one of the counsel therein made approbrious and derogatory use of the word "Jew" in characterizing a witness for his adversary. The Judge thought, and rightly, that such a statement was calculated to defeat, delay, hinder and impede the ends of justice.

Apparently other ideas of justice and propriety prevail in the great American Hinterland, the West, whither the course of empire, if we may still fully believe Bishop Berkeley, takes its way. We read in The Oklahoman, of Oklahoma City, Okla., that a case was tried there last month which necessitated the decision of a jury as to whether certain defendants had or had not been guilty of a criminal conspiracy to defeat the constituted authorities in their task of controlling the excise. In that action the presiding justice suffered an attorney for the defendants to the bar, in his summation, to make the following charge against the attack upon the principal witness for the people: "Don't take away the liberty of these men (the defendants) on the testimony of a Russian Jew—a member of the race which crucified Christ—a man who would crucify anybody to further his own end." In the face of such language we can but gasp in wonderment! Was the judge presiding at the trial asleep when he permitted it to go to the jury without the necessary corrective word, in default of more suitable and drastic action, from himself? Did he not, in suffering these words to pass unretruded, commit prejudicial error upon which the adequate dispensation of human, even Oklahoma justice was bound to shatter?

There can be but one answer to these questions? Contrast the course of the New York jurist with that of his Oklahoma brother in the presence of a precisely similar state of facts. Thereby enough is said to bring out this perversion of justice this pandering to vile prejudice on the part of the Western pleader and of the judge who sat supinely by and permitted such, in the proper light! Our courts are supposedly the palladium of our liberty—but not, if differences are to be raised up between man and man. If Oklahoma tribunals are ruled by American law and constitutional principles, we must now be shown that they recognize such when they see them!

Rabbi Louis Bernstein, of St. Joseph, Mo., condemns smoking and card-playing as subversive of the Judaism of our rising young Jews. His criticism is not without its foundation. There are many adolescent (word beloved of the "annual picnic") Jews whose Yiddishkeit is only exposed at the auction-pinochle table. As for smoking on all days of the week, save Shabbas we are not so sure that it makes for the downfall of faith. At all events, why does not Rabbi Bernstein try his hand at a new Shulchan Aruch?

To mark the recent entertainment and ball held by the Zionist Council of Greater New York, and at the same time the tenth anniversary of the founding of the organization, there has been issued The Decennial, edited by Dr. Solomon T. H. Hurwitz. It is a pamphlet containing interesting essays on Zionism, among others one on the American Jews and their future, by Dr. Schmarjahu Levin, which is extremely suggestive, and another, the opponents of Zionism, by Dr. Hurwitz. The booklet is so well done that we hope the council will not wait until another decade has rolled around before repeating it.

"For us the After (of the war) will raise questions and problems so gigantic that they will quickly obliterate all the sacrifices, the heavy sacrifices, we have brought to the war, and even the dreadful, unspeakable agony which the war has inflicted upon our people." This observation fell from "Mentor" in the course of one of his recent papers in The Jewish Chronicle. In this he took a very pessimistic view of the condition of Jewry throughout the world, once the war has run its inevitable course, and expressed his opinion that the outlook for our people is everywhere dark in the extreme. In especial, he finds much to cavil at in the case of the Jewish leadership which was to have been assumed by this community. He declares us to be mastered by that selfish and degrading sentiment of Ich gebibe. What would "Mentor" have? Is he so thoroughgoing a partisan that he cannot appreciate the duty and responsibility of neutrals? It is needless to refute his "arguments"; they answer themselves. Of such as he Jewish leaders are not born!

YOUTH AND AGE

בנערנו ובזקנינו נלך:

"We will go with our young and with our old."—(Ex. x, 9).

TIME is an illusion only to philosophic reflection. This fabric of time—now woven of starshine, now of sunshine; now of the blue substance of the sky, now of the sable weeds of the night—in whose meshes our lives are continually entangled, appears unreal and fantastic only to those whose mind rises habitually above earth and heaven. But to the average man, Time assumes an aspect at once real and formidable, meeting him like a thousand-armed monster with which we must heroically grapple. For time must be lived and life must be timed. Time is an intensely practical thing. It gives measure and proportion to our work. It is a swift spur to our activities. It adds sacredness to things holy; it lends dignity to tradition. It makes—or unmakes—truth. It sharpens—or blunts—the keen edge of love and hate; it refines, or coarsens. How Time seethes in the passionate veins of youth! How it blooms in the graceful charm of the maiden's cheek! Again, how Time hardens in the heart of age! How it dries and becomes impotent in the ebbing life-sap of the man who has more days behind than before him!

No one doubts the reality of Time who counts its forward rush by the increasing wrinkles of his face or by the rapid whitening of his locks. As milestone is planted after milestone along the great world-path where the pilgrim hosts march, we seem to see the veritable figure of Old Father Time standing by each stone, his bony finger marking upon it a new number; and with each new number our anxieties increase, for it is a prophecy of the last number meant for us. We do not doubt the gulf separating us from our own youth: with our own eyes we behold the chasm yawning between us and the youth of others. The young go their own way, impatiently, impetuously; they leave us behind. What has age to do on the course where the young run with winged feet? How can age dare set the pace to youth, since age cannot hold the pace set by youth? Did Moses say: "We will go with our young and with our old"? Did he dream of Youth and Age going together? Ah, it was ever so: it was ever the pious wish of Age to see the young walking the same path with the old; but youth has its own ideas, its own ambitions, its own soaring aspirations. Youth and Age must part company!

With the dwindling years this widening gulf between Youth and Age is the cause of much pain. But Time is indifferent to our pain and plaint. Time, ever-renewing itself, never growing old, sweeps forward, furthering the anticipations of Youth rather than answering the repinings of Age. All our repinings, all our poignant regrets, will not bring back the day that is past. Time calls to Youth in the dawn, and Youth replies with glee; it calls to Age in the sunset and the declining shadows—shall age grow sullen and sulky? If at times young Chantecler needs to be told that his crowing will not bring the morn; how much oftener needs the wise old Owl to be told that his hooting will not prolong the night?

Placed as we are in the twilight Yesterday and Today, must ours be either the vanity of Chantecler or the pessimism of the Owl? Must Chantecler crow down the Owl—must the Owl hoot down Chantecler? Must we face life either with extreme confidence, or with extreme intolerance? And must there be this conflict between Youth and Age? It seems there must. But there is no such conflict in Time. In Time there is a certain soothing smoothness of flow: Day does not jostle Darkness and Night does not encroach upon the brilliant domain of Day. The sun, which last night dipped nimbly beneath the western sky, rises today with easy grace above the eastern mountain-peaks. In human life, however, Youth and Age crowd one another, each begrudging the other the freedom of God's world-house. In the rabbinic legend a certain class of Angels are created only for a day: they are creatures of one day's light and one day's song; they are born of the flush of the dawn and they die into the nothingness of the night. Each day brings successive hosts of Angels that hymn themselves into oblivion. These Angels do not outlive their song; but men are not so: men oft outlive themselves, while the Angels of the new dawn are waiting to take their place. The Alps lift their snow-capped crest above the verdant valley; even so, just as Nature places frost and flower alongside each other, do Youth and Age stand side by side. And as the snow-clad summit frowns down upon the greening valley, while the greening valley does not smile up to the snow-clad summit, so does crabbed Age frown down upon venturesome Youth, while venturesome Youth does not smile up to crabbed Age.

Can Age grow less crabbed—more tolerant; can Youth grow less reckless—more reverent? Will Age know the nick of time when it is best to retire with becoming grace and turn over Life's great duties to Youth? Will Youth know how to temper its impatience and wait with due modesty for its turn? Ah, life would partake of the dignity and poise of nature if such a shifting of burdens from bent backs to broad shoulders could be effected without clash! Then the young and the old could go together. But such a thing is well-nigh impossible. For youth will dash forward where age cannot follow. And let us admit at once that our sympathies are with the young. Rather let Youth dash too far forward than that mankind, dragged back by Age, should lag too far behind. Progress must be assured, and progress belongs to Youth. "Age may have one side,"—says Stevenson—"but assuredly Youth hath the other. There is nothing more certain than that both are right, except that both are wrong." We say, however, that since it is impossible that both should be at once right and wrong, we would rather declare in favor of the young. For time is always on the side of the young. Time leaps forward with youthful daring, carrying the race onward to a Better Dawn.

The rabbi of one of our uptown conservative congregations certainly set a bad example to the community when he, with his wife and daughter, occupied a box at a Yorkville burlesque theatre last Friday night. This may be the "conservative" way of "remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy," but for our part it was an unpardonable breach and certainly not in harmony with his admonitions to his female congregants to refrain from shopping, and in other ways desecrating the Holy Sabbath.

THE ALEXANDER KOHUT MEMORIAL FUND AND LIBRARY.
 The Alexander Kohut Memorial Library, which has recently been donated to Yale University by George Alexander Kohut, of New York city, comprises a collection of works relating to Hebrew and rabbinic literature, collected by his father, the Rev. Dr. Alexander Kohut, the well known rabbi and Orientalist, author of many learned books on the history of comparative religions, and whose Dictionary of the Talmud, in eight folio volumes, is the recognized standard.

Prior to his coming to America, where he was active as rabbi and the organizer of a reactionary movement against the radical reform tendencies in modern Judaism, which culminated in the establishment of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, he was widely known in Austria-Hungary as a Semitic scholar. He was the first Jew to receive his Ph. D. degree from the University of Leipzig, honoris causa, on the strength of a dissertation on "Jewish Angelology and Demonology and Their Relations to Parsesism." This little work proved epoch-making, as it opened up a comparatively new avenue of research to students of religion and folk lore. He wrote, at frequent intervals, many other books and monographs on his specialty, notably "A Critical Examination of the Persian Translation of the Pentateuch by Jacob ben Tawus," in the sixteenth century—the only surviving literary monument of the Jews of that period. From 1878 to 1892, while pursuing his rabbinical office in Hungary, he was engaged in publishing a new critical edition of the Lexicon of the Talmud, compiled by Rabbi Nathan ben Yehiel, who flourished in the eleventh century, and the first edition of whose work is valued among the rarest treasures of Italian incunabula. Only three or four copies of this book, published, presumably, in Rome, about 1475, are known to be extant. Two of these are in America, one in the library of Columbia University and the other, formerly the property of Dr. Kohut, in the Jewish Theological Seminary, which boasts of having perhaps the largest collection of early printed books in the Hebrew language in the world. The original work of the old Italian rabbi, comprising a few hundred quarto pages, has been amplified and extended until, in Dr. Kohut's edition, it covers over 4,000 double column pages, in folio. It is interesting to note in this connection, that the library of Yale University was among the first subscribers in this country.

Dr. Kohut was a celebrated preacher, who spoke, with equal facility, half a dozen modern languages and was well versed in all the Semitic dialects. His expert knowledge is conclusively shown in the critical apparatus of his dictionary. During the last decade of his life, he devoted considerable attention to the new find of Hebrew-Arabic manuscripts, which were brought to western countries by traveling scholars and dealers, and he made them the basis of numerous publications. He was a prolific and versatile writer, and a complete catalogue of his writings would fill many pages. In 1897, at the suggestion of Prof. Max Muller, of Oxford, his son, the donor of the library, published a volume of 700 pages, entitled "Semitic Students in Memory of Rev. Dr. Alexander Kohut," which comprises contributions by famous Jewish and Christian scholars throughout the world, and which represents a noteworthy tribute to his learning and character.

Just prior to his removal to America, in 1885, Dr. Kohut was appointed by the Hungarian Government a member of the Upper House, being the first Jew who was accorded the privilege of representing his people in Parliament. He was, prior to that, the Titular Supervisor of Schools in Hungary and gained great distinction as an orator. In that capacity he proved himself a powerful exponent of his people, and was called upon to officiate at public functions, in conjunction with government dignitaries.

So much for the man whose library has now been acquired by Yale University. The collection consists mainly of books pertaining to Hebrew literature. Every department of Jewish learning is represented. A prominent feature is the unusually complete set of periodicals in Hebrew and modern languages, bearing on the history and literature of the Jews. It is safe to say that no private library is so well equipped in this respect. The Talmud and its various commentaries and later rabbinic works, including the literature of the "Responsa," which comprises the correspondence of famous Jewish authorities on legal and ritual matters, are naturally well exemplified. On the philological side, there are lexica and handbooks of every description, covering a wide range of subjects; and there are several thousand books and pamphlets pertaining to Jewish life and literature written in modern languages.

The book plate which is to be inserted in each volume comprising the Kohut Collection has historic and symbolic significance. The central figure represents a scholar at his desk, and the clasped volume is inscribed with Dr. Kohut's principal work, "The Aruch." The supercriptions indicate his Hebrew name in full and the quotation from Genesis further explains it. In the upper left hand corner the rooster refers to the name "Kohut," which in the Slavonic dialects is equivalent to the word "Kohut." In the upper right hand corner the lion is emblematical of the tribe of Judah which was Dr. Kohut's middle name. The other Jewish symbols need no further explanation.

It is difficult to single out items of great rarity in giving a brief description of this distinctive collection. While it has not very many early prints, there are quite a considerable number of later incunabula, from the early sixteenth century, which cannot readily be duplicated in any but the leading libraries of the world. For example, there are several specimens of the famous Soncino prints, which are valued for the singular clearness and correctness of their text, and there are items from other notable Italian and Turkish presses. Altogether, it is a notable collection, which will form a splendid nucleus for the establishment of a large library of Hebrew literature. The Kohut collection is to be further enhanced by the donation of the entire balance of the library now in the possession of Dr. George Alexander Kohut, containing mainly works of reference bearing upon Jewish history and bibliography, aggregating about 1,500 volumes of printed books and about 100 manuscripts, many of them unique, which he has agreed to turn over to the university at some future time. Provision will also be made to augment the Kohut collection by the purchase of such works as are called for by readers and students, and the present donor expects to acquire, from time to time, other noteworthy collections which are to be incorporated in the original gift, so that, before many years, this department of the university library may take equal rank with the collections of other learned institutions.

In connection with the Kohut library, there has been established an Alexander Kohut Memorial Publication Fund of $7,000, for the publication, in the Yale Oriental series, of a number of volumes of texts and researches relating to Semitic studies. This has been accomplished through the enthusiasm and persistency of Prof. A. T. Clay, who has likewise interested others in extending the usefulness of his special department. It is expected that at least one volume, biennially, will be issued from the income of the Kohut Memorial Publication Fund, one-half of which is to be contributed by the university. The publication of these volumes will go far toward establishing and sustaining the prestige of the university for scholarship, and it is gratifying to know that so auspicious a beginning has been made by the foundation of these special publication funds.

It is a significant fact, which it is well to bring out, in conjunction with the new impetus given to the Semitic and Oriental departments of the university, that the study of Hebrew and its cognate dialects has always been encouraged at the college from its incipency to the present day. The establishment of the Yale Divinity School was perhaps the first real step forward in America, in the furtherance of Hebrew and Oriental scholarship. President Ezra Stiles has the distinction of being one of the few Americans who became proficient not only in the Hebrew language, but in rabbinic literature. His correspondence in the sacred tongue is preserved in the university library and is shortly to be edited by the donor of the Kohut collection, whose book on "Ezra Stiles and the Jews" (New York, 1902) gives entries from his published diary, relating to Jews and Judaism, and furnishes a critical survey of his services in the cause of Semitic learning. It is interesting to know that Yale is perpetuating the traditions established by President Stiles and is again becoming the sponsor of Jewish thought and literature.

The New Big Idea in Motion Pictures

"A Million Dollar Scenario"

- Scene 1.—You see an interesting story on the Screen. One thousand feet of film flash before your eyes. Sixteen pictures to the foot of film. Sixteen thousand animated photographs to the reel. Many reels in each show. You usually get your money's worth.
 - Scene 2.—Movie films are purchased in blank. The pictures are printed later. Millions of feet of film used each year. Costs a tremendous amount of money. Moving Picture Producers try hard to cut the cost of film. Years of thought and study. Success at last. The New Big Idea!
 - Scene 3.—DUPLIX (The New Big Idea). Prints two pictures in the place of one. Makes each reel of film do double work. Doesn't disturb the present method of taking Motion Pictures nor the equipment necessary for showing the pictures. Thirty-two pictures to each foot instead of sixteen. Cuts the cost right in half. Millions spent for film each year. See the saving!
 - Scene 4.—Experienced Motion Picture men form Company which controls the Duplex System. Will make pictures by new process. Outlook good for Big Profits. Many thoughtful men see opportunity to make money by investing a few dollars now in the Company which controls "The New Big Idea." Large investors and small investors have equal opportunity.
- Part II.—This interesting story is continued in greater detail in a Booklet entitled "The New Big Idea." We will mail it to any one interested in sharing in Duplex Profits.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

Cream Pudding.
 Line the bottom of a buttered pudding dish with breadcrumbs about as thick as a sheet of pie crust. Mix a pint of cream, a quarter of a cupful of sugar, a little grated nutmeg and the yolks of three eggs, beaten. Beat the whites of three eggs stiff, fold them in to the other mixture and pour into the pudding dish. Sprinkle with a thick layer of crumbs and bake brown. Serve cold.

Dough Cake.
 One pound dough, one-quarter pound sugar, one-quarter pound currants or sultanas, two ounces butter, one ounce candied peel, one egg. Wash and dry the currants, chop the peel, then mix these well into the dough; beat the egg, add the butter to it, and beat all the ingredients well together. Grease a tin, turn the mixture into it, and bake about forty minutes.

Sausage Rolls.
 Four sausages, one-half pound flour, one-quarter pound dripping, one egg. Skin the sausages, make flaky pastry, after the final rolling, cut the pastry into four, place a sausage in the center of each piece of pastry, egg half-way round the edges, fold over, press the edges together, trim neatly, place on a greased baking tin, brush over with beaten egg and bake in a hot oven about a half hour.

 Bits of fish that are left over, mixed with a little chopped celery and a few olives chopped, and blended with mayonnaise, makes a very good sandwich filling.

Smoked or Salt Tongue.
 Smoked tongues must be soaked over night in cold water. Salt tongues do not require this. Tongues must be placed in boiling water and simmered till tender, then skinned and replaced in the liquor to get hot again.

Broiled Tomatoes.
 Cut large tomatoes in two, from side to side, not from top to bottom; place them on a gridiron, the cut surface down; when well seared, turn them and put on butter, salt and pepper; then cook with skin side down until done.

Veal in a Mould.
 This is a dish that can be prepared the day before and can be served cold for the next day's luncheon or dinner. Boil a knuckle of veal until tender. Pour off the water in which it was boiled and mince the veal. Add the minced veal to the juice and pour in a mould. Add thin slices of hard boiled egg and place in a cool place and when cold place on the ice. Serve on a platter, garnished with parsley.

Egg Sauce.
 Egg sauce made in this way is delicious. Beat the whites of three eggs stiff. Beat the yolks until creamy and sweeten with three tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar. Just before serving fold in the stiff whites and serve immediately.

Celery Salad.
 Chose small and tender stalks of celery, chop a little parsley and chives very fine, and mix with Rossetti's French Salad Dressing. Pour over celery and serve.

For cleaning painted walls, dissolve two ounces of borax in two quarts of water, add one teaspoonful of ammonia and use half this amount to a pail of water, using no soap.

At least once a week the carpet sweeper should be thoroughly cleaned and the brush freed from hairs and threads. The bearings should be frequently oiled—the smallest amount being used, and a feather will be easy to apply the oil with.

Coal oil is recommended as an excellent cleaning agent. One woman uses a rag moistened with coal oil to clean her stained wood floors, to clean woodwork, porcelain bathtub and stand and also to polish the wall behind the kitchen range.

When sweeping carpets always remember to sweep the way of the grain. To brush the wrong way is not only bad for the carpet, but it tends to brush the dust in instead of out.

All kitchen and pantry shelves should be painted, both top and bottom, and if white enamel paint is used, paper can be dispensed with.

If towel racks in kitchen and bathrooms are not nickel, carefully paint them with at least two coats of white enamel paint, to avoid the possibility of iron rust spots as well as for general cleanliness.

Hashes and minces are much improved if the meat be soaked in the gravy or sauce some time before being reheated.

Philosophy and Publicity

The portrait which accompanies this article is that of Mr. M. W. Atkins, who in commercial circles is a leading tea expert—a fact which resulted in his selection by the Private Estate Coffee Company as the manager of their "Yom Toy" department, which has charge of the distribution of Yom Toy tea and Yom Toy coffee. Mr. Atkins at an early age acquired a thorough knowledge of the tea industry and its intricacies. Prior to his coming to America Mr. Atkins was the sales representative of the Terrabona Tea Co. of London, Ltd., in South Africa, and the success which he attained there by his original methods of publicity is attested by numberless testimonials, newspaper clippings, etc., which it was the privilege of the writer of these lines to peruse.

M. W. ATKINS.

Mr. Atkins is primarily a business man, but he has a hobby, and that is literature, particularly the Talmud which he has studied from his early boyhood. He is somewhat of a philosopher, also, and we are appending here with some of his trite sayings, which are well worth reading:

God often sends down the eggs of beauty, folly and brainlessness in one basket.

A woman's heart when troubled and disappointed is filled with tears, a man's with liquor.

A self-made man cannot be an atheist, for he always worships his creator.

Love bought is like a fire made of straw, big smoke and little warmth.

If you borrow money of a poor man you advertise your own liabilities.

Religion is the handle, fanaticism the blade, which not only cuts other handles but harms its own, and is therefore the most dangerous weapon on earth.

Fibber's licenses should only be granted to persons with good memories. We lose our sight by looking and staring at other people's misdeeds and faults, hence our blindness to our own wrongs and errors in life.

Years are but days in true love's life and centuries in loveless life.

Truth often leaves the delivery of an excuse to the lie.

To make love is folly of divine wisdom, to make money is wisdom of human folly.

Intemperance, laziness and sloth are the best pupils in the school of idleness, and their distinction is "poverty."

You will often find love and friendship dead in many men and women, for "trust" killed them.

We are often fit to put a black cap on when judging our friends in their absence.

True friendship is the fittest lining for the mantle of love, for it protects the body directly.

Love is an atmosphere which is chilled by heat and heated by cold.

Life is a dream to those asleep, an active duty to those awake.

Unless you spell your "true love" "SELF-DENIAL" others will spell it for you "SELFISH."

Carelessness and wastefulness are the Kosher Kitchens in City Institutions.

Six years ago the City of New York installed a Kosher kitchen in the City Hospital on Blackwell's Island for the comfort of the Jewish patients, whose religious scruples being thus considered, were quicker helped toward their physical restoration. In compiling the estimates of expenditure for this year, according to the plan of the Bureau of Standards, the slight extra cost of this Kosher kitchen was noticed and its abolition decided upon.

Mr. Albert Lucas, the honorary secretary of the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America, addressed a letter to Commissioner of Charities John A. Kingsbury, who had only given his indorsement to the proposal of the Bureau of Standards after an investigation. Unfortunately the Commissioner was misled upon the most important point which led him to this decision. He was told that the "leading Jewish hospitals of the city do not maintain Kosher kitchens." As a matter of fact all the Jewish hospitals but two do maintain Kosher kitchens. Besides this the location of the kitchen is not of the best, but Rev. Dr. Bernard Drachman, president of the Union, and Mr. Lucas say, after having visited it, that it is very satisfactory, under the circumstances.

The third point that the Commissioner found and the only one which was interesting to the Bureau of Standards was the slight extra cost entailed through the employment of special help and the purchase of Kosher meat. These items amount in the City Hospital on Blackwell's Island to the insignificant sum of $3,400 per annum. Dr. Drachman and Mr. Lucas have interviewed First Deputy Commissioner Henry C. Wright, Dr. Bacon, the superintendent of the City Hospital, and Mr. Wolf Sheinberg, who accompanied them on their visit to the hospital and introduced them to Commissioner Kingsbury. After a most cordial hearing the Commissioner promised to continue the kitchen, at least for another month, to enable him to investigate the matter further, it

Rheumatism

A HOME CURE GIVEN BY ONE WHO HAD IT

In the spring of 1893 I was attacked by Muscular and Inflammatory Rheumatism. I suffered as only those who have it know, for over three years. I tried remedy after remedy, and doctor after doctor, but such relief as I received was only temporary. Finally, I found a remedy that cured me completely, and it has never returned. I have given it to a number who were terribly afflicted and even bedridden with Rheumatism, and it effected a cure in every case.

I want every sufferer from any form of rheumatic trouble to try this marvelous healing power. Don't send a cent; simply mail your name and address and I will send it free to try. After you have used it and it has proven itself to be that long-looked-for means of curing your Rheumatism, you may send the price of it, one dollar, but, understand, I do not want your money unless you are perfectly satisfied to send it. Nay—know that, like the worm, the spirit proud Must some day slumber in its earthy shroud.
What then availeth? Though man's life extend
A thousand years, he cannot stay the end.
Rebellious, he is seared in flaming wrath—
Nor can gold cumber the Avenger's path.
Ah, wretched man, ope wide thine eyes,
and know
Whence thou hast come, and wither thou must go.
For thou art like the gourd, which night hath born,
Yet perisheth ere it hath met the morn.
Far better that thou ne'er hadst lived,
to hope
For greatness, whilst thy feet o'er pit-falls grope.
How puny thou, who sinnest for thy bread—
Which, when withheld, doth rend thy mind with dread.
The soul—first gleaming with a heavenly fire
In thee—is gone:—and thou art as the mire!
Behold man's glory sink beneath his pall:—
So goest thou, and strangers take thine all.
And yet, unchecked, yieldst thou to passion's sway?
Give heed—to answer on a later day!
Forsake your ways; return unto the King;—

For still may He withhold the reckoning.
Ye haughty souls—to God raise heart and hand,
And, sunk in contrite supplication, stand:
"For all our many sins our spirits weep;
Woe to us, who have gone astray like sheep!
"Can we entreat and lift the face to Thee—
For crimes that hold our souls in mastery?
"Oh, Ruler, raise Thy people from their plight;
Despite their sins, be merciful in Thy might!—
"Let loving kindness and compassion rise
Thou art our Lord, to Thee we turn our eyes!"

Health Department and Kosher Butchers to Confer.

On Monday evening, January 10, there will be held in the Straus Auditorium of the Educational Alliance a conference, the second of its kind, between the Department of Health of the city of New York, represented by its Health District No. 1, and the retail food dealers' associations. The first conference of this kind was held on November 23 with the Hebrew Retail Grocers' Association. The conference on Monday evening is with the Kosher Butchers' Association. The Educational Alliance is co-operating with the Board of Health in introducing preventive, educational methods for the elimination of health statute violations. This method is in distinct contrast to the old Board of Health method of securing results by detection and prosecution only. The spirit of friendliness and the increase of mutual understanding between the health officials and the retailers is greatly increased as a result of these conferences, and the friendly relationship established assure co-operation. These meetings are unique in their underlying motive—municipal co-operation to prevent rather than to reach Central Committee's Pocket Dime Savings Bank.

The pocket dime savings bank recently issued by the Central Committee is attracting the attention of its co-operating branches throughout the country.

An order for a new series has been placed, although the banks have hardly been out ten days. Through this medium the contributor has the security of knowing that his mite must reach the hands of the treasurer. It controls "the dime from your pocket to the mouth of your starving brother in the war zones."

The pocket dime banks, as shown in the cut herewith, facilitate the collection of war relief. Every volunteer who helps in this way is daily adding the cause, and can easily obtain the assistance of his friends and neighbors by dime contributions.

The bank holds $2.50 and must be turned over to the local treasurer, who will empty it. Bank forms have been prepared and each treasurer or field director must send to the head office the name and address of the party who makes the collection. Another form has been provided for the treasurer when he sends a check for the total sum obtained from all of the banks he issued. The amount taken out from each of the banks, giving the number of each of the banks emptied is shown. A receipt will then be issued by the general treasurer for the total. Cards will be mailed to each of the volunteers whose banks have been emptied, showing the individual amounts turned in. In this way no leakage is possible, and absolute control is assured. The forms also control the fact whether or not the bank has been re-issued to the same party or is retained by the treasurer.

It is hoped that the various lodges and fraternal organizations throughout the country will fall in line and make this plan the great success it deserves.

The children of the Hebrew National Orphan Asylum, 57 East Seventh street, New York, have turned over to the Central Committee the sum total of their savings, amounting to $24.05. One of the boys of ten years was asked why they wished to part with all their savings. He replied "The orphan children in Russia and in other countries are worse off than we are. We became orphans naturally, and it was God's will. The children in Europe have been made orphans by the hand of man."

Jewish Home for Aged and Infirm.

A testimonial banquet given by the officers and directors of the Jewish Home for Aged and Infirm to the representatives of the organizations affiliated with the Federation of Roumanian Jews, at the head of which is Dr. P. A. Seigelstein, was held at Carlton Hall, 106 West 127th street, on Sunday evening, January 2, 1916. The chairman of the banquet, Mr. Norbert Salter, opened the affair by welcoming those present. The toastmaster, Dr. Siegelstein, the president of the home, delivered an eloquent address in which he pictured the institution, its location, surroundings and exceptional accommodations offered to the inmates, some of whom have reached the age of one hundred years. Some hail from Russia, Austria, Germany and Roumania, and all are being most carefully cared for and tenderly looked after. The toastmaster then introduced Rev. Dr. J. Silverman, of Temple Emanu-El, and Dr. Henry Moskowitz, the president of the Civil Service Commission, respectively, who made eloquent pleas to the guests present in behalf of the institution and called upon the organizations represented to remove the encumbrance from the institution by paying off the mortgage on the building.

The speakers were very warmly applauded and their appeals were generously responded to and resulted in the collection of nearly one thousand dollars as a nucleus toward a fund for the purpose of paying off the mortgage on the present building, which, at the present time, is filled to its fullest capacity, and to enable the administration to begin with the building of a new cottage on the grounds of the home. Among those who entertained the guests were Mr. Maurice Morrison, the famous German actor; Miss Louise Haims, a singer of note, accompanied by Prof. C. De Dodo, and Maurice Graubard. A dance, which lasted until 3 a. m., terminated the festivities.

"Tag Day" Nets $2,865.

Through the zeal and practical self-sacrifice of the 2,055 volunteers who last Wednesday braved storm, sleet and cold drenching rain to collect money, the People's Relief Committee, one of the organizations working in co-operation with the American Jewish Relief Committee to assuage the sufferings of the Jewish war refugees, announces that the sum realized on "Tag Day" was $2,865. The number of coins collected total 2,295,475.

On the basis of 15 kopeks being the required sum to support a human being for one day, the "Tag Day" will save 450,000 lives from starvation, and if 3 kopeks will provide for a day's milk for one baby, those who went out collecting on "Tag Day" can have the satisfaction of knowing that their efforts resulted in supplying the means whereby 2,186,500 Jewish babies will be fed.

Among the larger sources of income of the "Tag Day" were the contributions derived from collections made at the Yiddish theatres.

After appeals made by Dr. Shmaryahu Levine, Sholom Ash and Jacob Panken, the Thomashefsky Theatre benefit performance yielded $1,582; the Kessler Theatre, $600, and the People's Theatre, $300. To these sums must be added a large amount of jewelry that was donated, but which has as yet not been disposed of.

Those who are mainly responsible for the success of the "Tag Day" are Dr. Samuel Ellsberg, who as chairman of the "Tag Day" Committee, had charge of arrangements; Mr. Boris Fingerhood, the secretary of the People's Relief Committee; Dr. Fannie Dombro, Dr. Anna Aronowitch, Mrs. Simon Strunsky, Mrs. Philip Lewison and Mrs. J. Karp.

Concert for War Sufferers.

CORRESPONDENCE.

When Should the Congress Be Called?

Editor HEBREW STANDARD:
In yielding to the wishes of the people, the leaders of the American Jewish Committee have shown that they are not so devoid of understanding as might have been supposed from their erstwhile stubborn opposition to the popular movement for a Jewish Congress.

But in agreeing to the holding of a congress only on certain conditions, it is nullifying the very support which it is attempting to give to the congress idea. The chief motive of the congress movement has been to do something promptly and effectively in behalf of our brethren in Europe. The congress should be held as soon as it can be organized, and we should be in the position to press the claims of the Jewish people before any peace conference assemblies. The American Jewish Committee insists that the congress be held after the war. This may mean that we will come together to do something after the time will have passed for attaining real results. Where will we stand if peace conferences assemble even while hostilities are still under way? It is perfectly clear that after the war it will be too late for us to make any demands, and that the nations, which have been at war, will be entirely wrapped up in settling their own affairs.

Why should not the preliminary conference of organizations decide upon the date of the congress? If we believe in a congress, if we really trust the people, we can surely trust the Jewish representatives who will assemble in conference to decide as to when the congress should be called. Are we to have real democracy in this matter or are we to be guided by a new brand of democracy, limited, properly labeled and approved by the American Jewish Committee?

I am for the pure, unadulterated article. I believe in the wisdom, the judgment, and, above all, in the loyalty of the Jewish people. Let the people decide as to when the congress shall be called. Very truly yours,

MORRIS MARGULIES.

Syracuse, N. Y.

A generation goes and a generation comes, but the earth stands forever. Similarly a rabbi goes and a rabbi comes, but the rabbinate remains intact. Rabbi Max Drob of Adath Yeshurun Synagogue, left here for Buffalo some two years ago, and Rabbi Adolph Coblenz succeeded him. The latter, is, indeed, a worthy successor. Rabbi Coblenz is inspiring, interesting and impressive. A product of the Real Schule der Israelitische Religions at Frankfurt-on-Main, Germany, the institution established by Rabbi Samson Raphael Hirsch and conducted by his followers, Adolph Coblenz makes his presence felt in the midst of Syracuse Jewry, the ministrations of reform and the administrations of orthodoxy barely responding to local needs and demanding necessities.

Rabbi Coblenz is a scion from Jewish nobility. Rabbis, sages and savants being, indeed, the Jewish princes, counts, lords and barons, his grandfather being until his demise the rabbi of Bath Beach, the Rev. Meshulman Feivish, of blessed memory, while his father, Rabbi Judah Sigmund Coblenz, of Brooklyn, is the author of "Rigshel Jehudah," a book of research, investigations and lucubrations, recently published. A book of gems, a book of gold, the words used by Longfellow in praise of the Talmud, may spontaneously illustrate the "Rigshel Jehudah," the work of J. S. Coblenz, the father of Adolph Coblenz, the rabbi of Adath Yeshurun, Syracuse, N. Y. The latter may continually be the recipient of congratulations and felicitations.

The Linath Hazedek, the society which cares for the invalids, the sick and the feeble, almost usurped the pulpit of Ahavath Achim Synagogue last Saturday. The reason is obvious. The scriptural allotment for the Sabbath dealt, among others, with God's, Abraham's and Lot's practicing mercies and exercising sympathies with inferior beings and lower creatures, because of which the Linath Hazedek claims the monopoly of this particular day, its institutions and constitutions, so as to stimulate activities and attract membership.

Mr. Jacob Cooper, the president of the Linath Hazedek, gathered all the members of the society to his house, 126 Renwick place, to celebrate the society's anniversary. There was given the participants a double treat, mental and material, the host and hostess diffusing the latter, while Rabbi Samuel E. Elkin, rabbi of Ahavath Achim, and your correspondent dispensed the former. The combination of physical and spiritual is, indeed, a continuous trait of Mr. Jacob Cooper; his elder son, Phillip Cooper, is a practicing physician, exercising pity and extending sympathy to his patients of all sorts and assortments; whereas the other son, Meyer, a boy of four summers, attends divine services every Saturday, dons his Tallith, kisses the Tzitzith and reads his prayers with the rest of the worshippers.

now another thought occurred to Koenig which brought him relief. Even should he escape death there was no home to which he could turn for a welcome back to life. His home town had been sacked and destroyed. He knew not the whereabouts of his mother or sister. He had never found a sweetheart. He lost no one, and, as it seemed, he would be lost to no one. And there was a great consolation in this death: it was as he had always contended: The Jews could fight as well as another people—even better. And they could sacrifice! With such thoughts as these Koenig gradually passed off into slumber.

Grigory Miklaitch, on the other hand, could not rest for a moment. The self-possession of the Jew almost maddened him. Had this man nothing to lose? he thought. Well, he, Grigory Miklaitch, had everything yet before him. A diplomatic career, a life of luxury and laziness, a life in which he would sit in artistic salons and relate before admiring ladies the adventurous details of his army exploits. He had dreams of these quite often in the last few months. He made no efforts to fall asleep. He must somehow contrive to escape. Suddenly, when Koenig was already fast asleep, he arose cautiously and peered out of the tent. The night was already subsiding, though it was still quite dark. Over the distant hills he could discern the lifting of an immense shadow which he knew was done by the hand of morning. A number of guards were walking about the tent, but they did not seem to see him. Suddenly a thought that was half a hope flashed through his brain: If these guards saw Koenig attempt to escape they would not interfere. He turned back swiftly, and shedding his hat and drawing his coat closer about his face he stepped out. He saw a number of the men suddenly turn their heads to one side; his heart gave a sudden leap as though the thing were already accomplished. He crept softly but swiftly through the lines and was not met by a single challenge. At the end of the lines he found a horse waiting. He mounted, and with all speed he rode back to his own tent, where he instantly connected himself through telephone with Col. Serge Seminovitch.

Early that morning David entered the prisoners' tent and was astonished to see Koenig lying alone stretched out comfortably on the floor. He touched him gently. Koenig awoke and looked up. "That you, David?"

"Master, we thought you had gone!"

Koenig took in the situation swiftly, and his brows contracted sternly. "I'm ashamed of you fellows," he said. "The sub-lieutenant has played you a fine trick. Don't you realize that by this time the whole regiment is marching around to cut you off? Tell Green!"

Suddenly Green, followed by a number of other soldiers, appeared at the opening of the tent. When Koenig stepped out Green held out to him the blue and white banner. "Koenig," he said, huskily, "the men want you to lead them in this situation. Will you do it?" Koenig took the flag, gazed at it abstractedly for a moment, and then turned to the men. "I will do it," he said. "Here Green, you must inform headquarters to move forward as quickly as possible to meet and reinforce us. We will move back, so as to make it impossible for Colonel Seminovitch to cut us off."

It took only five minutes for the regiment to move. It soon swept through the rocks of the highlands, and, led by Koenig and Green, it proceeded very swiftly toward the rest of the regiment, which soon joined them. The Russians were outflanked and thoroughly routed by the combined forces.

David found the bodies of Koenig and Green side by side among the slain. His master's breast had been pierced by a Russian bullet. He knelt down and kissed the forehead which had paled only in death. The bodies of the two young Jewish leaders were taken up and borne to the next town, where they were buried amidst the profound sorrow of the men who had learned to love and follow them under the Jewish banner.

An unusual brilliant array of soloists will appear at the four subscription concerts of the Russian Symphony Society, Modest Altschuler conductor, at Carnegie Hall on Saturday evenings, January 15, 29, February 19 and March 18. Mme. Maria Kuznetsova, the famous Russian soprano, will make her concert debut at this series; Lucian Muratore, leading tenor of the Chicago Opera Company, and Lina Cavalieri, the well known soprano, will appear jointly; Evelyn Starr, the Canadian violiniste, a pupil of Leopold Auer, and Mme. Marguerite Melville-Liszewska, pianiste. At the initial concert, Saturday evening, January 15, 1916, another opportunity will be given to the New York public to judge the efficacy of the lamented Scriabine's "colored-light music" scheme, in another composer's work, when Anatoly Liadov's symphonic picture, "The Enchanted Lake," will be produced with Mr. Altschuler's "colored-light" part for the "Tastiera per Luca," for the first time anywhere in the world. The novelty of the evening will be Stravinsky's Symphony No. 1 in E flat, and Miss Evelyn Starr will play Glazunov's violin concerto.

For the fifth concert of the season, the Educational Chamber Music Society will give on January 9, 1916, at 8.15 o'clock, in the Straus Auditorium of the Educational Alliance, 179 East Broadway, a program which is preponderatingly Russian. The first number will be the String Quartet, op. 5, by Zolotareff, with its four movements, allegro moderato, andantino scherzo, allegro, finale; allegro. The second number will be a Piano Trio, G major, No. 31, by Haydn, with its three movements, allegro, andante, finale; allegro moderato. The last number will be a String Quartet, op. 22, by Tschaiakowsky, adagio; moderato assai, allegro giusto, andante ma non tanto, allegro con moto. Mr. Modest Altschuler, conductor of the Russian Symphony Society, is also conductor of the Educational Chamber Music Society.

This (Sunday) afternoon at Carnegie Hall, the Philharmonic Society of New York, Josef Stransky conductor, will be heard in the fifth of its Sunday series, with Harold Bauer, the pianist, as assisting artist. Mr. Bauer will play the "Fourth" Saint-Saens Concerto in C minor, and the orchestral numbers will include Liszt's Hungarian Storm March, Dvorak's Scherzo Capriccioso and the "Eroica" Symphony, No. 3, in E flat, of Ludwig van Beethoven. Thursday evening, January 13, and Friday afternoon, the 14th, will be devoted entirely to compositions of Richard Strauss. The same program will be presented at both concerts and will include the Prelude to the opera "Guntram," the two tone poems, "Death and Transfiguration," and "Life of a Hero"; also the entire finale of the opera "Salome," with Marcella Craft singing the title part, which she created at the opera's premiere in Munich.

Germaine Schnitzer will give her New York recital in Aeolian Hall Saturday evening, January 15. The program has been captioned "A Piano Recital of the Romantics," and includes numbers by Schubert, Schumann and Mendelssohn. The complete program is as follows: (a) Praeludium, op. 104, No. 61. Mendelssohn (b) Fantasie, op. 15 (Wanderer). Schubert Allegro con fuoco, ma non troppo. Adagio. Presto. Allegro.

- (a) Impromptu, B flat major, op. 142. Schubert (b) Auf dem Wasser zu singen. Schubert-Liszt (c) Lied ohne Worte, op. 102, No. 5. Mendelssohn Variations serieuses, op. 54. Etudes Symphoniques, op. 13. Schumann

The new year was ushered in at the Hippodrome with a record advance sale for Charles Dillingham's "Hip, Hip, Hooray," the pageant of novelty, beauty and distinction. During the holiday week this vast playhouse broke all its previous high attendance records, by entertaining more than 70,000 people in the twelve performances. The gross receipts for this week were the largest ever played to by any New York playhouse and the great success begins the new year with a most brilliant and auspicious outlook. All the big features, including Sousa's Band and the sensational ice ballet, are seen twice daily—the same performance in every particular being presented every matinee and every evening. An added novelty in the Fifth Avenue scene is the appearance of the boy violinist, Max Gladstone, the little street musician discovered by Mrs. Sousa. The marked success of Anna Pavlova two weeks ago has resulted in her engagement for next Sunday night's concert. She will be assisted by a number of artists from the Boston Opera Company and, of course, Sousa's Band will be on hand.

Marie Doro, who seems to have deserted the legitimate stage for the film play, makes her Triangle debut in this week's star combination at the Knickerbocker Theatre. Bruce McRae, long a favorite Broadway leading man, appears as co-star with Bessie Barriscale in "The Green Swamp." Weber and Fields, who not so long ago were "The Best of Enemies" at the Knickerbocker, are now "The Worst of Friends." Miss Doro has a distinguished company, including Frank Campeau and Wilfred Lucas in "The Wood Nymph."

"The Princess Pat," Henry Blossom and Victor Herbert's dainty and tuneful comic opera, will enter upon the sixteenth week of its highly successful run at the Cort Theatre Monday night. In the title role, Miss Eleanor Painter has fully identified herself as the most fascinating and artistic prima donna on the English speaking light opera stage. The original cast remains intact.

"The Unchastened Woman," Louis K. Anspacher's successful comedy drama, will begin the fourteenth week of its engagement at the Thirty-ninth Street Theatre Monday night. Emily Stevens, starring in the title role, has achieved the triumph of her career. The excellent cast includes Christine Norman, H. Reeves-Smith, Hassard Short, Louis Ben-Nison, Isabel Richards, Almee Delmores and Jennie Lamont.

BE HONEST IN BUSINESS!

Dear Children:

The Menorah Hamaar further tells us that besides the crimes of theft, robbery, taking usury and taking bribes, which the desire to obtain money by hook or crook leads a person to commit, and which every one knows are crimes, there is a general desire of people to overreach each other in business transactions. Perhaps those people think that this overreaching, inasmuch as it is not direct theft or robbery, is not a violation of the Law, therefore the Holy Torah warns us against it by saying "Ye shall not overreach one the other" (Leviticus, 25) to teach us by this commandment that we must be honest in all our business transactions; that no one should desire to overreach the other either in buying or selling. Of course, it is understood that every one is in business for profit, nevertheless the Torah commanded us not to buy for less nor sell for more than the value of the article, and although our Rabbis of blessed memory have made allowance of less than one-sixth of the price which, if an article is bought or sold at less than one-sixth more or less than the value, the transaction is deemed valid, for said they, it is human nature to make an allowance for such a small amount, still the real pious man should sell for only as much as the thing is worth, but if the seller says to the buyer the market price of this article is so much, if you wish to buy it from me at double the price and have no claims against me for overreaching you, you may do so, or if the buyer says to the seller: "The article is worth so much, but I wish to buy it at half the price if you wish to sell it on condition that you have no claim against me for overreaching you, you may do so, then these transactions are valid as there was no misrepresentation—all of the foregoing applies only to business transactions among merchants, however, if a person sells his own personal property at whatever price he desires he is not guilty of overreaching an intrinsic value in the eyes of its owner far above its market value, and he does not wish to part with it except for more money. This the Talmud has taught us, for Rabbi Chisda has stated and Rabbis Dimi and Eleazar have concurred in his opinion that the laws of overreaching apply to business transactions between merchants, but one who sells his private property may charge more than the market price because that is the only reason he has for selling it (many are the laws of business in our holy Talmud explaining what is right and wrong), and if a man will make up his mind to be guided by the Heaven-given laws and will have no desire to make money unlawfully the Eternal, blessed be He, will provide all has wants in accordance with the Law.

The love of money is very strong but if a person makes up his mind to be honest it cannot overcome his good resolution, but there is another love which it takes all a person's powers and faculties to control—that is the love of pleasure. The Great Creator has endowed man with intelligence to choose the good and reject the evil, so that he shall not be as the brutes who do not know how to select the good from the evil, but only take what they see and occupy their entire time in filling up their bellies and sating themselves with whatever they can find. Man, however, was created on the plan that his body should be subservient and his mind to help the mind carry out its noble ideas by means of the body and all the pleasures that he does take are only to maintain his body in good health in order that he shall be able to learn and to teach, to understand and to instruct others how to attain the true knowledge and how to cleave to the ways of the Lord in order to merit the life eternal. This, say our sages of blessed memory, is what King Solomon meant when he said: "In all thy ways acknowledge him." Even the desires of the body in which Saul takes no pleasure, should be fulfilled with the thought that it is done for the sake of Heaven. And this also did King Solomon say: "The righteous eats to satisfy his soul," to maintain a life devoted to the worship of the Holy One, blessed be He, but the wicked person and the fool eat only for the pleasures of the body, and they fill up their belly not caring how much money they spend for it, for, think they in their folly, that the world was created only for eating and drinking, therefore "the belly of the wicked always suffers want."

From your earliest childhood, dear children, learn to control your appetite, and you will grow up to be good and strong men and women, living long lives of happiness for yourselves and for all mankind.
