A JEWISH STORY

By LEON FERARU

When he opened the door of his cozy apartment Louis Schatz found his young wife and child playing "ringa-ring-a-rosy" in the narrow hall, discretely illuminated by the magical electric lamp.

"Papa!" screamed the boy, all glowing with excitement and pointing with his tiny velvety finger at his father.

Schatz, his face suddenly becoming wreathed in smiles, took the little fellow up in his arms and kissed him.

"Papa, come pay winga-winga-wosy!"

"Just a moment, sonny; let me kiss mamma. How are you, Bessie?"

Schatz, burdened with the boy who, like a butterfly, was beating the air with his small hands, stooped to realize his wish. Bessie, blooming with happiness, made it easier for him. And for a few moments two blond heads touched the black and manly mane. Then, as the group stepped into the living room. Bessie asked:

"What's the news?"

"I have great news!"

"What is it?"

"I'll tell you; just let me put down this youngster."

The youngster however, wanted to be amused.

"Papa pay winga-wosy!"

And father, mother and baby started the merry ring to the great satisfaction of little Robert.

"Ringa-ring-a-rosy,
A pocket full of posies,
Ashes, ashes
All fall down!"

To be sure, only Bobbie carried out the last words of the game literally, thus giving papa a chance to take off his overcoat and resume his talk.

"You know the Fairyland? Well, Wellington, its editor, told me he wants some Jewish stories. He happened to read my sketch in the Judaea, and he thinks I might do better if I took up fiction. He says he'll pay me one hundred dollars for a three-thousand-word story to start. Later he might pay me two hundred and even two hundred and fifty dollars for my contribution."

"Is it really true?"

"Oh, it's true, all right! It's a settled fact. Think of giving up in my time my twenty-five dollar job, to say nothing of the fame I'll get!"

"And we would be able to move on the West Side. And take a trip to Bermuda. It's really great, Louis!"

"Yes, it surely is great. But I must bring him my first story in a couple of days. And tomorrow I Bessie! Now, let's eat supper and then write."

"Baby wonni wite, papa!"

"All right; give baby a pencil and mustn't want to do such things. You are too young for it. You are a little bit of a baby."

"Baby wonni 'tory!"

Bessie sternly interrupted their dispute.

"No, we must eat supper now. Come, papa, and let baby stay here alone if he doesn't want to eat with papa and mamma."

Bobbie, however, was ready to take his place in his high chair. And their supper, mingled with their joyful talk, was eaten in a very quiet manner. The lamp threw cascades of light on the white tablecloth, on the shining plates and sparkling silver. The clock on the Dutch shelf ticked confidentially, filling the dining room with its beating like a human heart. The radiators sang mysteriously and the wild November wind sighed in the windows.

"Come, baby, it's time to go to sleep."

Baby, distracted by his improvised toy made out of a glass and a spoon, came back to reality at this summons.

"Baby wonni pay foon."

His lips made a queer grimace in pronouncing this word. The hardest combination of sounds for him was sp. So he made up his mind to use f as a kind of intermediary and provisional letter.

"You must go to sleep, Baby."

"Baby wonni pay!"

Schatz intervened.

"Let him play a little longer."

"You have to write, and you know how he disturbs you."

"Baby wonni wite, papa!"

"You see, he is going to bother now. You must go to sleep, baby."

"Baby wonni wite!"

And baby began to make faces, ready to burst into a wild, stubborn cry.

"Let him play a little longer with his papa. He is such a dear!"

"You spoil him."

"I just love him!"

"And your story?"

"I haven't a subject anyhow."

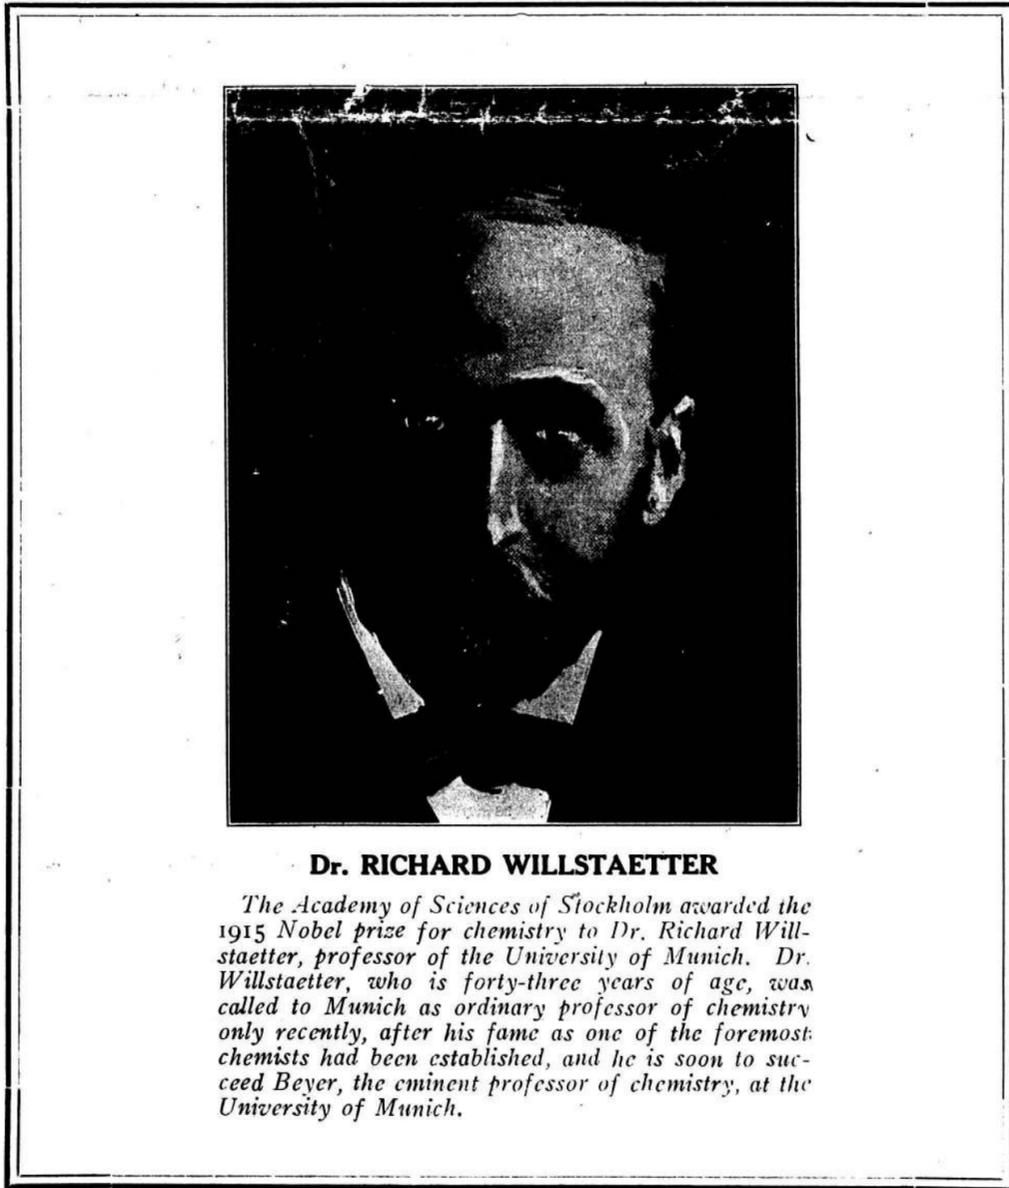

"Papa, baby wonni 'tory!"

"Yes, sonny, papa will tell you a story. Or suppose baby tells papa a story this time."

And the little son of the poet told his papa a story:

"Upon time was 'tittle pussy, and 'tittle pussy wonni eat meat."

"That's it! That's a wonderful subject! This little fellow is a genius! He suggested a subject! Let's try!"

Dr. RICHARD WILLSTAETTER

The Academy of Sciences of Stockholm awarded the 1915 Nobel prize for chemistry to Dr. Richard Willstaetter, professor of the University of Munich. Dr. Willstaetter, who is forty-three years of age, was called to Munich as ordinary professor of chemistry only recently, after his fame as one of the foremost chemists had been established, and he is soon to succeed Beyer, the eminent professor of chemistry, at the University of Munich.

keys of the machine. He had hardly finished the first page when he felt somebody pulling him by the arm. It was Bobbie, in his nightgown, his eyes wide open, his cheeks aglow, his fluffy golden hair in disorder.

"Baby wonni wite."

Before his father could stop him he had climbed into papa's lap, hammering at the keys with his plump fists. Upon the spotless page a succession of cabalistic letters followed this rude touch. Baby was "witing a 'tory."

"He will spoil the typewriter!"

This was mamma. She had come in with the nursing bottle in her hand to take baby into the bedroom. But baby was inspired, divinely inspired. The consonants succeeded each other upon the page, from time to time meeting a y or a, thus giving to the long impossible line the appearance of a Hindoo word as we usually find it in the Mahabharata or the Ramayana.

"Now, go to sleep, baby," his father tried to convince him.

"I wonni wite!"

"You see," remarked Bessie reproachfully, "you are spoiling him." "He is a dear! But he has driven away my Muse. I can't follow my subject."

"Let me take him."

"No, let him stay here until he gets tired."

After baby had gone to sleep in his arms Schatz handed him over to his mother, closed the door carefully and noiselessly and returned to his desk, where he began to write feverishly. Sentence after sentence, dialogue after dialogue, page after page, a story began to take shape under his hurrying and diligent fingers.

Yes, it was a good idea he had. He would not change it. The subject was at hand. He did not have to go far to seek it. Why look for artificiality when true life was unrolling itself around him? And nothing is more dramatic than life itself.

From time to time he stopped to change the sheets, to light his pipe. Enveloped in a cloud of smoke, under the circle of light falling directly on the page, his black hair running down his forehead like a stream of dark waters, Schatz was creating a fragment from his own life.

He wanted to give a definite contour to his thoughts.

Bobbie was the beginning and the end of his existence. Bobbie's sayings and doings were greater in father's eyes than the exploits and deeds of Alexander the Great or Napoleon. Schatz took for his hero a little fellow like his sonny, in whom his papa is entirely absorbed. Knowing how hard it was for him to overcome handicaps and prejudices, privation, misery, despair, he decides to sacrifice himself for the sake of his child. He would renounce ambition and fame. He would consecrate all his time and energy to the education and welfare of his boy. And later—let the boy carry out the plans cherished by father. For we live in our children.

What is caprice and passion, vain ambition and timely conquest, adventure, triumph, glory, compared to the deep and unfathomable love of a father for his son?

With the fifteenth page the story was finished. It was not written the way stories usually are nowadays, but it was sincerely done. It was an echo of his home. It was delicate and heartwarming. It was filled with smiles and childish laughter, with the thrills of everyday sensations, with every parents' dreams and hopes. The lines were full of idealism, the idealism every father nourishes for the sake of his offspring.

When he rose, tired and thirsty, Bessie came in on tiptoe to see the result of his work.

"It's almost daylight. Is it all done?"

"Yes. It's all done. Read it."

Bessie read it. And when all through she exclaimed:

"Why, it's about us! It's pretty. A true copy of our home. And it's full of baby. But there is nothing Jewish in it. You told me Wellington wanted a Jewish story!"

Schatz reproachfully answered: "Isn't a story of home life, of devotion, of sacrifice, of love for one's wife and child altogether a Jewish story, Bessie?"

SONNETS OF MOTHERHOOD.

By ALTER ABELSON.

Descent.

And now again on solid earth I stand;
No more on giddy rise of rapture,
soar.
No agonies, nor ecstasies I store;
No more through Red Seas find I
Holy Land.

No radiant empyrean I climb
And challenge cherubim with sorrow's lore;
To see God's dazzling light essay no
more
And he who spelled in flame God's Law sublime.

Descended I? O no; I rose to heights
More high. But now I stand thereon serene;
I am a mother now, I am Love's
queen;
And joy has crucibles as woe and night.
I am a Goddess; love and God I've seen,
And what are tears if they can bring one light?

Presentiment.

Who are the legioned cherubim on high
Are they the babes who died in budding time
Of life, and ended in their prelude-prime?
And who are all the angels in the sky?
Are they the mothers who like martyrs
die
In giving life? For who is more sublime
And who more cherub-like and sweet than rhyme,
Than they whose love and valor, death defy?

What Paradisal bliss gives God for woes
Of babes who tasted death, and saw the night
Before they tasted life and knew the light?
What pearls of joys has he, what May,
what rose,
For mothers dying in their labor
throes?
Save that they are the mirrors of
His sight?

Loss.

Who put my heart in some eclipse of sun?
What fatal night had come upon my day?

Who drove me from my Paradise for aye?
What flaming swords around me terrors spun?

No trial hard, no travail did I shun,—
Each sigh was song to me, each rack,
a ray,
Each pang a prize; each tear, a thrill of May;
Nine weary moons their wheels of pain did run.

And all my sowing was a lily of death,
And all my travail but the grass of grave!
A God, and a little child he could not save.
Is this His love to turn my love to wrath?
Is this His Paradise, that heavens hath,
To take a mother's heaven, and make her rave?

Unmothered.

What is that dreaming marble figure there?
I know the fancy crib, the pillow,
too,
But this is not the living babe I knew,
It was so warm, so soft, so rosy-fair.

And it could cool, and give a voice to air;

It had yet on the Paradisal dew;
They were but dawning yet, his heavens blue;
And did my womb but blocks of marble bear?

The hour of nursing comes, my breasts
brim o'er,
My udder is full of milk, my yearning
teat
Is dewy and drips, No suckling lamb
'twill meet;
The rosy little mouth will milk no
more!
How full the grave, what fleeces find his fleet!
How poor and empty is my heart and sore.

Despoiled.

What felon stole my dove from out
my nest,
And left my breast to wither, waste
and dry?
So rich my milk; my babe unfed
doth lie,
As yet it cannot tell its heart and hest.

Mourneth the crib, with hand a-dream
I drest;
The fairy vests all tenantless, now
sigh;
The dear rosettes about the household fly:
The fairy booties moulder in the chest.

Why did the grave not take the raiments all—
The robes, the silver spoons, the rings of gold,
And leave the naked babe within my fold?
The dress remains, the babe to dust
did fall.
Away from mother's breast, on bed
so cold,
O who will nurse it, if at night it call?

Illusion.

I saw the mist enwrap the garden far,
And veil a thousand flowers from
the eye;
I saw the night make roses look a lie,
I saw a cloud make dark a shining star.

Trouble of British Jews of Russian Parentage—Attestation Squabbles Put Right—Another Likely Jewish Government Appointment—Sir Francis Montefiore Excites the Critics—Representative Opinions on Jewish Victims of the War—Zangwill's Little Boy.

London, Dec. 23, 1915.

Some Jews anxious to "attest" under Lord Derby's scheme found numerous difficulties placed in their way in certain quarters owing to the crass ignorance, apparently, of the attesting officers. One difficulty which arose owing to this lack of knowledge might be mentioned here. Jews flocked to the recruiting stations under this scheme and were there attested, placed in correct groups, and then returned to their ordinary occupations to await calling up. In some cases those Jews who had Russian fathers, however, were refused. This trouble was very acute in Manchester owing to the rejections because of remote Russian ancestry. The leading Jews of Manchester lodged a united protest, stating that at the last hour attestation was refused to men born in this country, but whose parents were of Russian descent. The recruiting authorities noted the appeal and issued a notice shortly after that a mistake had been made at a few stations and that it had since been rectified. All British citizens of foreign parentage who had been refused attestation therefore were told to apply to any recruiting station and if they were medically fit they would be enrolled in their proper groups. If they failed to pass the doctor, they could have certificates to that effect. At the same time the Manchester recruiting authorities announced that certificates of exemption granted to men of British birth, but of foreign extraction, were cancelled because they were issued also under the same misapprehension.

There were not so many of these cases in London, but I might quote one that happened in the metropolis as an example of the foolishness which has immediately been disavowed in the higher circles. A Jew named Cohen, living in the East End at Houndsditch, makes the following statement:

"I went to the recruiting station at St. Paul's Churchyard to join under Lord Derby's scheme, taking my registration card. I was attested and asked many questions and stated the following facts: Born in the city of London; age, 37; married; living with my wife at 34 North Block, Stoney Lane, E. C.; three children. I was then asked where my father was born. I replied Russia, and then to my surprise I was informed that Cohen was a German name and that I must bring proof of his nationality. My father has been a resident in this country sixty-four years, and was married to an English woman, all his children being born in the city of London. I offered to show my birth certificate, but was told that it was of no use. My father was born in Riga, Russia. Of course I protested at being called a German and the officer replied, 'Oh! You don't like it.' As my registration card was stamped 'attested,' he took it and marked it out. So I, no doubt, will be called 'one of the Jew shirkers.' I have the registration card with the word 'attested' crossed out."

Still, happily, such cases as this are on the whole rare, and it is believed that quite 15,000 more Jews have joined the army under the Derby scheme, which scheme, as readers of the journal may remember, is one whereby the recruit attests, draws immediately one day's army pay and then returns to his own occupation, from which he will be called up if required at a month's notice—single men being called before married men, and the youngest single men before the oldest single men.

In contrast to the little indications now and again from certain parts of the country of anti-Jewish feeling or expressions of ignorance about so-called "foreigners," it is good to note the attitude of England's educated classes, almost without exception, and of the government. I hear that it is by no means unlikely that the Hon. Edwin Montagu will become Viceroy of India in succession to Lord Hardinge. Montagu knows his India well. For a long time he was Under Secretary at the India Office here and made a prolonged visit to India itself.

Sir Francis Montefiore, speaking at the Spanish and Portuguese Synagogue last Sunday, startled some members of the congregation in describing his remarks as "a strange outburst." This is perhaps not surprising if Sir Francis is correctly reported as follows: This is no time to discuss small questions of sect. As a matter of principle he would do no congregational work except purely routine work, such as a meeting like theirs, which was necessary, and he had refused all attempts on the part of individuals or associations to discuss so-called Jewish questions. At the present time thoughts of all patriotic Englishmen should turn only to national questions. Numbers had wished to discuss certain questions with him, especially Zionism, but he positively refused to have any connection with the Zionist movement. Now that its real aims and objects had become clear to him and also to what it desired to lead, he felt that it was only right for him to declare that it was a movement of which he most strongly disapproved.

Adolph Haendler, of Paris, recently left, as recorded in these columns, a bequest of $40,000 to the Jewish Board of Guardians in London. I hear that it is unlikely that the money will be received while the war is on, and if it came to hand the present rate of exchange would take a lot of gill off the gingerbread.

Meetings for the relief of Jewish victims of the war are now being held practically every few days in one part of the country or another. Many of the leading men here have been expressing opinions urging out contributions. Here are a few of the authoritative statements of various meetings. Claude C. Montefiore said: Even before the war the condition of their brethren in faith within the Russian Pale of Settlement was one of stress, of difficulty, of wretchedness, and of misery. A population which was handicapped to such an extent was bound to suffer in great measure from the war. That was the first reason for the necessity of their fund. The second reason was that the theatre of war now being fought in was a "Jewish" theatre. Towns and villages, inhabited for the most part by Jews, had been utterly destroyed, and that had occasioned the greatest distress. The Russians thought that the people who were persecuted would not be loyal.

On the contrary, the Russian Jew loved his country, but his country did not recognize him. The vast mass of Russian opinion was against him, and as a result over a million and a half refugees were wandering about to escape the horrors of invasion. Many had been reduced to absolute beggary.

Sir Stuart Samuel, M. P., declared the districts that had been devastated had given them their greatest rabbis and most erudite scholars. Many of their co-religionists, who came to this country centuries ago, originated from Russia and Poland, and therefore they in England must not forget the source from whence they came. He hoped that the Jews would not be left out of consideration by the nations after the war had ended. They in England, happily, were not subject to such dangers as beset their brethren in Russia, and they must feel for them in their distress. He appealed to those present to respond to the appeal of those who were so much in need of their assistance.

Israel Zangwill said Poland had the sympathy of the world in its national aspirations, but when they wanted to trample on the weaker nationality—the Jews—they were bound to protest. It was remarkable how the weak were ready to tread upon the weaker when their opportunity came. The late Lord Rothschild once told him that the Christian banker was always jealous of the Jewish banker's success. The non-Jewish banker wanted to come to the city at 11 o'clock in the morning, leave his office at 5, have a day or two for shooting, his week ends free, and be successful, and if he were not successful under such conditions he became jealous of the Jewish banker who was. The Jews were needed in every country. In England, the government required the assistance of Lord Reading at the Treasury, and it was certain that he would not have been called from the law courts to the Treasury if it were not that he could render greater assistance than a non-Jew. Dark as was the present position of the Jews in Russia, there was reason to look forward with hope. As for the pressing need of organizing a Jewish emigration after the war, he need hardly say how much he agreed, that having been part of the Ito's work till the outbreak of the war. A Jewish state was certainly necessary, but such a state could of course develop gradually.

Zangwill, in the course of his article on "The New Shylock," entitled "The Jew That Shakespeare Drew," tells the following amusing story: When my little boy reached his eighth birthday he was, by ancient promise, to be taken for the first time to the theatre. Unfortunately he demanded Shakespeare, and Shakespeare in London was not. We scanned the theatrical advertisements for an alternative, but there was nothing up to the intelligence of so old a child. In desperation we studied the cinema advertisements, but they were little superior. The situation was only saved by the kindness of a film company, which turned for him a special performance of "Joan of Arc" in its empty studio, and in this solitary fashion the little lad paid his first visit to the British theatre. Such was the state of the stage in the greatest empire in the world has ever seen. Carlyle said England should sooner give up India than Shakespeare. Yet for India—or, indeed, the most malarious strip in Africa—we would fight to the last shilling and the last drop of blood. Shakespeare we allowed Germany to annex without a protesting voice.

ITEMS OF INTEREST IN THE JEWISH WORLD

A camp of the Sons of Zion has been instituted at Dallas, Tex.

Steps have been taken toward organizing a Hebrew high school in Cambridge, Mass.

Dr. Edwin Wolf has been appointed chairman of the Finance Committee of the Philadelphia, Pa., Board of Education.

The Jewish Literary Club of San Antonio, Tex., which had grown dormant, is being reorganized and revived with success.

Up to the 5th inst., $64,603 had been pledged by the Baltimore (Md.) Jewish community for the aid of Jewish war sufferers.

The members of the Congregation Children of Israel of Danbury have entered a call to Rabbi A. Grinspan, of Brooklyn.

Among the contributions received by the American Jewish Relief Committee last week was one of $34.02, sent by the First Methodist Sunday School of Corinth, Miss.

Mrs. S. Sugarman, a pioneer Jewish charity worker in Omaha, Neb., died on the 2d inst. She was for years identified with the Ladies' Hebrew Relief Association.

At a meeting of the Chicago (Ill.) Committee for the Jewish War Sufferers last week it was decided to postpone the big campaign for funds until March, owing to the absence at present of many influential people.

Formal permission to sell its present edifice has been granted by the New York Supreme Court to the Congregation B'nai Jeshurun, of this city. The buyers will have until next May to complete the deal.

The Jewish Aid Societies of Brooklyn expended $52,000 in 1915, as against $12,000 in 1910, when the organization was first formed. In 1910, 200 cases of tuberculosis were cared for, as against over 1,000 in 1915.

Orthodox rabbis of Massachusetts have organized the United Hebrew Orthodox Rabbis' Society of Massachusetts. One of the purposes of the society is to have every State institution receive a rabbi, in accordance with the Massachusetts law.

Mr. Leon Stern, formerly director of the General Social Service Bureau of Philadelphia, Pa., has been appointed to take charge of the social service in the Jewish desertion cases in the Municipal Court. It is planned to enlist the Jewish charitable organizations in this new work.

The Young Men's Hebrew Association of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., have purchased for $16,400 a lot 50 by 150 in the heart of the city. The present building on the site will be razed and a modern structure to contain club rooms, gymnasium, library and class rooms, etc., will be erected.

In compliance with the representations from Petrograd, Jewish merchants have been allowed to visit the Caucasus, and the expulsion of 300 Jewish students from Kolpino has been cancelled. However, the Jewish refugees who settled at Narva and Yamburg and in the Luzsk and Gdovsk districts (near Petrograd) were ordered to leave those places.

The Jewish Hospital of Philadelphia, Pa., will eventually receive a large legacy through the will of the late Isaac Silvernale. The testator leaves his entire estate in trust, the income to go to his widow for life, also giving her the right to dispose of $100,000 of the principal by her own will. After her death, $75,000 is to be paid to the United Hebrew Charities and the residuary estate is left to the Jewish Hospital.

The military administration of Warsaw legalized the establishment of Zionist organizations and permitted them to make propaganda for the movement in the Polish provinces. Permission was also granted to the Jews to convene a conference of Jews of the Polish provinces, with a view of discussing the ways and means of improving the economic and cultural conditions of the Jews in Poland.

The Russians took hostages almost in every town in Galicia where they came. Of the Jewish population, the hostages usually were the rabbis of the towns, so that many of these Galician rabbis are now somewhere in the wilds of Siberia, and nobody seems to know what became of them. On account of their rigid observance of the dietary laws, these rabbis probably suffer additional hardships and sufferings at the hands of their captors. The Reichstag Deputy, Dr. Natan von Lowenstein, brought in a bill with a view of having the government intercede in behalf of these unfortunate to see that their release be effected. The Ministry are well disposed toward this plan and have promised their support.

His election was greeted with general satisfaction, both in the Jewish and secular press.

The Russian Ministry of the Interior has not favorably considered the petition of the Military Commercial Conference, praying for the complete emancipation of the Jews. And while it is disinclined to allow Jewish factory owners from the war zone to transfer their factories to villages in the interior, a circular will soon be issued permitting certain categories of Jewish refugees to settle at Petrograd and Moscow. The Prussian Year Book, which was recently published, contains several articles dealing with the various problems that the German Government will have to deal with soon after the war is over. One of these problems will be the probable influx of a large mass of Russian and Galician Jews, who will seek to establish themselves in Germany. The suggestion that the government establish a Pale of Settlement, according to the Russian Pale, is dismissed as incompatible with German traditions and culture. The only way that such a "disaster" might be obviated is by means of stringent immigration laws. It is also suggested in the same article that it was highly advisable that the German Government endeavor to obtain Palestine for the Jews and also urge all other powers to grant equal rights to Jews, so that the Jews will have no occasion to leave their present domiciles.

A conference of reactionaries has been held at Petrograd, attended by the metropolitan archbishops of Petrograd and Moscow, numerous priests, members of both Houses of Parliament and ex-ministers. The Assistant Minister of the Interior, M. Beletzky, was also present. The ex-Minister of Justice, M. Tcheglovitoff, presided. The Real Russian leaders played a prominent part in the proceedings. Their spokesmen accused the merchants of Moscow of having sold themselves to the Jewish bankers, and they made sweeping statements concerning the alleged capture by the Jews of the press, the schools, and the city of Odessa. The Jews, it was alleged, had become very insolent; resolutions, therefore, were passed against emancipation being granted to Jews and against religious tolerance. The Extension Work of the Rabbinical College.

In compliance with requests from many directions and in the interests of unalloyed Judaism in this country, the new Rabbinical College, at 9-11 Montgomery street, has instituted a series of extension courses in the various departments of Jewish learning to enable those young Jews who had received a preparatory training in the Torah and Talmud to pursue these studies in a more advanced form.

There are hundreds of high school and college men who are anxious to continue their Jewish education, but heretofore the Jewish community has provided no adequate means to accommodate them. It seems to be axiomatic among the large bulk of orthodox Jewry that with the Bar Mitzvah Jewish education ceases. These young men of themselves prove the absurdity of this view and thirst after an opportunity to sit at the feet of great masters of Hebrew learning in order to imbibe Judaism from its purest fountains. Such an opportunity is now open to them.

The courses given at the college are under the personal direction of Rev. Dr. Bernard Revel, president of the faculty of the college, and one of the foremost authorities on rabbinic literature in the world. He is assisted by a number of specialists in various departments of Jewish learning, who have undertaken to lead the work in their respective fields. There are to be given courses in the following branches: (a) Talmud, intermediate and advanced course, intensive study of texts; (b) Bible and biblical philology; a study of the Bible with the important Jewish commentators; (c) Jewish ethics and morals, with readings from medieval Jewish texts; (d) Jewish laws and customs; a study of sources.

The courses are to be given five evenings a week at the college building, 9-11 Montgomery street, and are to begin February 1. Tuition is free. It is hoped that all young men who have the necessary preparatory knowledge and who are eager to continue their studies, will not miss this splendid opportunity.

President Names Day for Relief of Jewish War Sufferers.

At the request of Harry Fischel, treasurer of the Central Committee for the Relief of Jews Suffering Through the War, with headquarters at 63 Park Row, New York, Senator James E. Martine, of New Jersey, last Thursday introduced the following resolution in the Senate:

"Whereas, in the various countries now engaged in war, there are nine millions of Jews, the great majority of whom are destitute of food, shelter and clothing; and

"Whereas, millions of them have been driven from their homes without warning, deprived of an opportunity to make provision for their most elementary wants, causing starvation, disease and untold suffering; and

"Whereas, the people of the United States of America have learned with sorrow of this terrible plight of millions of human beings and have most generously responded to the cry for help whenever such appeal has reached them; therefore be it

"Resolved, That in view of the misery, wretchedness and hardships which these nine millions of Jews are suffering, the President of the United States be respectfully asked to designate a day on which the citizens of this country may give expression to their sympathy by contributing to the funds now being raised for the relief of Jews in the war zones."

The resolution was unanimously adopted by the Senate and later President Wilson announced that he had set aside January 27 as a day on which contributions are to be made all over the United States for the Jewish sufferers of the European war.

Jews in Great Distress in Russian Provinces.

Mr. Felix M. Warburg, treasurer of the American Jewish Relief Committee, is in receipt of a cable from the committee of German-Jews engaged in relief work in Russian Poland, which reads as follows:

"Have recently returned from Berlin from a visit of inspection to Lithuania and Kurland. The distress is very great in Lithuania, particularly in Vilna, Kovno, Grodno and Bialistock."

This is one of a number of cables which have been received by the American Jewish Relief Committee, telling of the conditions of dire distress in which the Jews happen to find themselves at the present time in the war zone. There are thousands of Jews in New York city alone who have left relatives in the particular provinces mentioned in the cable. The American Jewish Relief Committee will make every effort to respond immediately to this cable by sending what moneys have already been collected for relief purposes to the vicinity mentioned in the cable.

Federation of Sisterhoods.

The twentieth annual meeting of the Federation of Sisterhoods will be held at Delmonico's on Wednesday, January 19, at 2 p. m. Mrs. S. Elkeles will preside and the speakers will be Hon. Dudley F. Malone, Mr. Walter Liebman, of the National Desertion Bureau; Mr. Leopold Plaut, president of the United Hebrew Charities, and Mr. Morris D. Waldman. Marks, and Mrs. Leopold Plaut.

The twenty-five constituent societies of the federation represented about 1,200 women and during the past year the membership has been doubled, the field of activity greatly enlarged, and much good work accomplished. The Jewish women of New York have raised approximately $250,000 for the Jewish poor of the city during the year.

The Recent Assembly of the Jewish Chautauqua Society.

The twenty-fourth annual assembly of the Jewish Chautauqua Society was held during the last week of December, 1915, at St. Louis, Mo.

Among the practical achievements of the assembly were the preliminary steps taken by the teachers in Kansas, Missouri and other States to form a branch association. This is another evidence of the influence of the society in holding its assemblies in the various parts of the country. These have stimulated into existence State teachers' associations. A number of these held their sessions during the last week of December, and in several instances had representatives in St. Louis. Quite a number of new enrollments were received in the correspondence school.

The social service and synagogue department of the society was ably expounded by Dr. Boris Bogen, of Cincinnati, and Dr. Sidney Goldstein, of New York. The second session of the summer school, at the metropolis, is being planned, and will no doubt draw a large constituency.

Dr. Berkowitz and Dr. Rosenau, at the head of the Chautauqua movement, were untiring in their guidance of the work throughout the sessions. The indefatigable efforts of the secretary, Miss Goldberg, won the enthusiastic acclaim of all.

During the course of the sessions, a tribute was paid to the memory of the late Solomon Schechter.

Twenty-two thousand of the householders have this week received reminders that the bags are in their possession, unfilled and their donation of castoffs, urgently solicited.

Besides, an organized effort has been made to reach the members of the lodges of the various Jewish fraternal orders in this city. Four hundred of these lodges have been approached and the co-

"SEE THAT YE FALL NOT OUT BY THE WAY."

By N. S. BURSTEIN, Cardiff, Wales.

We are now living in a time when the sinews of human thought are strained almost to their utmost extremity, when human suffering and the malicious arrows of devastation are piercing the heart of every thinking individual, and when the pain of wounds occasioned by the clash of arms make one almost despair of the world and the world's laws. In all the vicissitudes in the history of man, Jews have always been blessed with men who withdrew their thoughts from the pressure of their own life's cares, and devoted their time and energy to the welfare and well-being of Jewry. These men were generally more or less successful in saving their people from latter ruin and temporarily alleviating their ills, but alas, they always left the future to work out its own salvation. Suddenly there appeared on the scene Theodore Herzl, who, like Moses of old demanded everlasting freedom for his people. He stirred the world with the strength of his character, and the three primary elements for which he was striving were: The idea of resuscitation of the Jewish nation; the earnest desire of attaining it; and the choice of fitting means. The elements have commanded the respect and admiration of the whole civilized world. Still as long as these three elements did not co-work harmoniously in the minds of the Jewish people themselves, the sublime drama of the history of the Jew had to be left by Dr Herzl unfinished. But his great and true thoughts and ideas could never have a better opportunity and means of development, of dispersion, of seizing upon the mind, and holding it subject to their power, than they can have at the present time. All that is wanted now is for the Jew to master his Ghetto spirit and—a la Herzl—stick to his true ideas, and ask for his rights.

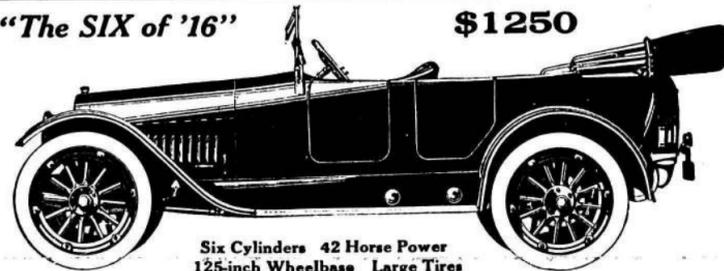

In the Nation of August, 1915, Lord Haldane said: "The possession of ideas is in a rigorous people the real source of organization. Without ideas, without 'the General Staff mind,' these may be organizing, but there can be no organization, no practical dexterity and individual quality can ultimately save from shipwreck a people which have no clear vision and no definite ideas." And yet, we have free born, excellent men like Mr. Louis Marshall and Dr. Cyrus Adler who shrink from the idea of holding a real democratic assembly to plead the Jewish cause before the world in an open and frank manner. It is very sad indeed when such men are swayed and regulated by their egotistical passions, and by considerations regarding their local well-being.

From time immemorial the duty of the Jewish brotherhood has been rooted into the Jewish heart. "Shall your brethren go to war, and will you sit here?" was the admonition given by Moses to the children of Israel when each of them was bound to give all the assistance in his power for the consummation of their aim which embraced the welfare of all. A few years ago, Mr. M. H. Wascowitz one of the grand orators of the I. O. B. B., delivering an oration of masterly effort, spoke, in part, as follows: "The Independent Order of B'nai B'rith is an order which stands for the exemplification and the practice of that magnificent rule that 'All Israel are brethren,' for the recognition of the bond of brotherhood that united all the members of our faith and race, and that recognizes the responsibility of one Jew for another. It shall be the work of the order to exterminate whatever senseless prejudice there may exist against the Jew." Does Mr. Adolf Kraus, the grand president of the I. O. B. B., think now that the senseless prejudice against the Jew can be exterminated behind closed doors.

That Israel is one entity all over the world, all the nations of the earth not only admit, but insist upon. Why then the timidity of the individual Jew to own it openly? "Die Judische Frage ist eine Weltfrage!" Nothing daunted Dr. Herzl, nor did he hesitate to call an open congress. Delegates came from every corner of the earth, and this cosmopolitan, thoroughly democratic assembly was the admiration of the entire civilized world. There was no question then of danger to hold a congress for the whole of Jewry. Why, then, should there be such a question now when the Jews of almost all the European countries show the world their merit for consideration in such an unprecedented manner? As I said once before, to achieve our aim, avoid the dangers looming ahead and seize "the opportunities that are presented, which come only rarely in the history of any people," we must turn to the great neutral power—America. It is only men like Louis D. Brandeis, the Hon. H. Morgenthau, Henry M. Goldfogle, Hon. Simon Wolf, Judge Sulzberger, Adolf Kraus, Dr. Cyrus Adler and a host of other American Jews who are fully qualified to deal sledgehammer blows at the Weltmeinung and bring the Jewish plea triumphantly before the forthcoming Bar of the Nations. Leaders of American Jewry! I beseech you in the words of our brother and great statesman of old, Joseph: "See that ye fall not out by the way." We Jews of the belligerent countries look upon you as the most potent, steady agent in the hands of Providence to help to regenerate the Jewish nation. Your action, united, is bound to influence the opinion of the American people and the frank, unrestrained judgment of the free born millions of America, expressed and enforced by a free press, a living, working strength which will be felt to the ends of the earth, and Judah will be saved!

London Artist Visits Us.

Mr. Horace Brodzky, the well known London artist and a former resident of New York, is a recent arrival from England. Mr. Brodzky was for some little time at the National Academy of Design and about seven years ago he left here to continue his studies abroad. He spent most of his time in London and visited Italy and Sicily. On his return from Italy he held an exhibition of his work in London. This exhibition was a pronounced success and immediately established Mr. Brodzky as an artist of great individuality and strength. Since that time he has exhibited his work throughout England and on the Continent. He also belongs to the "London Group," which is considered to be the most important art exhibiting body in England. Mr. Brodzky will most probably show his work at a local gallery, when New Yorkers will be able to judge the efforts of this interesting artist.

Air and Sunshine is a quarterly review, devoted to the prevention and treatment of tuberculosis, and specially issued with reference to the work of the Los Angeles Sanatorium Relief Association. We have received a copy of the January, 1916, number, and bid the new publication a cordial welcome. The association to which it directs attention seems to be doing a good and noble work and one, moreover, that is well worthy of the ungrudging support of all Jews everywhere.

Jewish secular nationalism, in other words, modern Zionism, is a phase of "the materialistic doctrines of modern nationalism with its brute force which has culminated in the titanic struggle now being waged in Europe." Rabbi David Philipson must believe all this balderdash, because he has said so time and time again within the past decade. As a matter of fact, the Zionists have no more to do with the great war than the Armenians, who surely were innocent of any contribution to the causes leading to its having been begun.

We fail to see what the presidency of the Jewish Theological Seminary has to do with the lethargic and inert condition of some of our "backwoods" Jewish communities in the scattered towns and hamlets of our great country. May it be supposed that the one is the direct effect of the other? A president of the seminary may be able to influence such settlements if he trains up disciples to properly minister to them. But, even if he does this, will the disciples be content to live in the "backwoods?"

The Jewish Student Congregation of the University of Michigan has issued its second year book, which is an attractively-printed booklet describing the work of this organization. Following somewhat the lines on which the similar student congregations at the great English universities were established this religious association of Jewish students at an important American center of higher education stands as an exemplar for others, and we express the earnest hope that ere long we may see many more such bodies take their rise to the glory of our ancient faith and the quickening of the Jewish consciousness in American life. The Michigan students' congregation may be outspokenly Reform in its religious attitude. This, while a mistake, is, of course, better than no religious attitude at all.

The report of the United Hebrew Charities of the city of New York, as presented at the annual meeting held on October 21 last, has been printed and distributed. It makes interesting and instructive reading. It shows that the managers of our premier communal institution are fully alive to the responsibilities devolving upon them, and have interpreted aright the temper of the community in dealing with the eleemosynary problems which affect it. These words refer particularly to the deficit of $32,500 which was incurred through the year's working, a deficit which the community should be glad and proud to "make good" at once and, also, which it should take care not suffer to recur. So multifarious and so important has the work of the United Hebrew Charities become that its annual reports are a graphic mirror of the communal situation for the periods which they cover.

One of our Western contemporaries presses to the fore with a very interesting but rather silly suggestion. It has come to its knowledge that pastoral visiting, so-called, takes up a large part of the time of certain rabbis and materially hampers their usefulness in other necessary directions in many a growing congregation. So, it remarks that a division of labor may be contrived whereby there should be two rabbis in such congregations—one to do the preaching and teaching, the other the pastoral visiting. The suggestion, while undoubtedly sincere and well-meant, is really impracticable and unworkable. Let us assume, in the first place, that the certain rabbis embraced by the suggestion of our contemporary are willing to take on assistants. Will these assistants, year in and year out, be content to do nothing else but undertake pastoral visits? If, besides, they be young men, will a training of this sort fit them ever to hope to succeed with congregations of their own eventually? We fancy not!

LUCULLAN "JUDAISM"

WE cull the following "choice" item from the correspondence columns of The American Israelite, for December 30, 1915:

Buffalo, N. Y.—New Year Eve, which falls on Friday night, will be celebrated by Temple Beth Zion, of Buffalo, by a ball for all the members of the congregation, to be held in the Temple Center. The celebration will be one fitting to the occasion, with all the atmosphere of fun and amusement which welcomes the fiscal New Year. The program will be started with dancing in the auditorium at ten o'clock, and will include a midnight supper and a number of innovations which will add greatly to the fun. All that can be done for a good time generally is being planned by the committees in charge. The regular Friday evening service in the temple will be displaced by a brief service at six o'clock. The purpose of the occasion is to protect the young people from the degenerating influence of the downtown cafe celebrations and to keep them and their elders from an open desecration of the Sabbath in public cafes and elsewhere. By this move Temple Beth Zion goes on record as opposed primarily to the vulgar, immoral celebrations of the New Year as are indulged and sanctioned by the public generally, and as opposed to the desecration of the Jewish Sabbath by Jews in public and in unwholesome atmospheres. Rabbi Louis J. Kopald, as the originator of the plan, has earnestly worked for its consummation, so that to date there are as many reservations for the affair as the large banquet hall can conveniently seat.

Taking a text and fastening a commentary thereon is known in Jewish literature as the Midrashic method. We propose to indite a sort of Midrash to the foregoing "text" and accordingly ask our readers carefully to peruse its lines.

The Friday night in question was New Year's Eve, quite incidentally also the Jewish Sabbath, and, therefore, a ball and midnight supper were "in place." It was "just the occasion" for "a good time generally." It should be noted that the regular Friday evening service was to be displaced by a brief service at six o'clock; these Buffalo "Jews" have their own Shulchan Aruch, and a little thing like the Sabbath service was made to be purlindly and lightly swept aside when one was on pleasure bent and "out for a general good time." It may also be observed that this "Jewish" way of spending a Friday evening took place in what is called the Temple Center, apparently part of the Temple Beth Zion itself, and therefore supplies those of us who rightly condemn institutional synagogues with a startlingly flagrant example of how the divine mission of the synagogue is capable of being perverted intemperately and excessively by one of these new-fangled innovations on the body and structure of our traditions. We for our part always considered these institutional synagogues so-called, mischievous inventions of persons with evil minds towards Judaism. Now we are confirmed in our view by the Buffalo "exhibition."

Finally, we should take stock of the couple of sentences in which the spiritual "guide" of the Buffalo fane applauds himself for his "opposition" to the desecration of the Sabbath! Keep the young people from the degenerating influence of the downtown cafe celebrations, indeed! By exposing them, perhaps, to the infinitely greater degenerating influence of an orgy of merriment within the sacred (here one should really say, sacrosanct) walls of the tabernacle? Keep the Buffalo "Jews" of this congregation from an open desecration of their Sabbath in public cafes and elsewhere! By prostituting the tabernacle chambers to lowly and fleshly uses? By suffering them to desecrate their Sabbath under the aegis of their spiritual "guide?" Indeed, this vile and nauseous exhibition of the "uses" to which our religion was put in Buffalo this New Year's Eve is enough to cause the cheek of every self-respecting Jew to blush with shame. A chillul ha-Shem of the blackest dye was here perpetrated.

To look at this matter with the necessary spectacles of sarcasm leads us to exclaim with the German, Pfue, wie schoen!

In this connection let us add the following editorial comment from the American Israelite:

The Israelite believes it is, or at least it aims to be progressive. Nonetheless, the announcement of a dance and midnight supper in our Buffalo letter gives it something in the nature of a shock. Gathering young people together under the auspices of the congregation, serves an excellent purpose in keeping them away from resorts where the occurrences are not edifying, but Friday night is the Sabbath and there are many of us who place Friday night dances in very much the same category as our Christian neighbors do Sunday night dances. However, the Israelite is in the sixty-second year of its existence and possibly may have notions about things that are a little, if not quite, old-fashioned.

We observe that our friend A. Rosenthal, of The Modern View of St. Louis, is fighting the reading of "The Merchant of Venice" in the public schools of that city and, incidentally, doing what he can to combat the prejudice of non-Jews against the people of our race and faith. He is to be commended for his persistent efforts to right the wrong done the Jews through Shakespeare's great drama in this respect, especially is the perusal of such a play by youthful minds, easily susceptible of erroneous impressions, calculated to work havoc on the future well-being of all concerned. In thus wishing Mr. Rosenthal Godspeed in his devoted task, we hope—it is almost the hope of despair—that he may succeed in eradicating anti-Semitic prejudice in St. Louis. Perhaps he will!

Cincinnati is to be congratulated upon having a modest (?) Reform rabbi in its midst. Here is what he says of himself, so it must be true:

I have enough thought and feeling and ability to present Judaism and Jewish religious thought every week half a dozen times, and always something that will hold the people, even those from other congregations, who once come to our (his) temple are struck with the Jewish note and the Jewish earnestness of the message, and they can always be counted on coming to worship with us again as often as they think they will not be missed and questioned by their own rabbis.

The Reform rabbinate is no field for such a man! The pecuniary rewards therein held out to him are too insignificant. He ought to go on some good vaudeville circuit, for, surely, he has nothing "on" Eva Tanguay!

"And the house of Israel called the name thereof Man (Mannah). (Ex. xvi, 15, 31.)

ויקראו בית-ישראל את שמו מן :

IN order to understand the force of these two texts, thus placed side by side, one might go back to boyhood days and recall the quaint humor of the pun with which little fellows love to tease each other: "What street do you live on?" asks Bobbie; "on What Street!" answers Johnnie. Similarly did the Children of Israel ask each other when they saw this unknown something that rained down upon them from the sky: "What (Man) is this?" and they answered: "It is What (Man). Hence the name of this unknown food becomes Mannah. Mannah—the unknown; Mannah—the mysterious; Mannah—the What whose Whatness no mind could fathom.

There is no question of the human mind so insistent as this What-question. And our answers are usually no more enlightening than the answer given by the Israelites. What-questions receive What-answers. The form of the question is turned about into the form of an assertion and the interrogation mark is replaced by a period. This mechanical trick we call the solution of the riddle of the universe. We call it human knowledge, science. The Children of Israel—as all immature minds are—were satisfied to call this unnamed thing a name; forthwith the subject was dismissed and naught was left to do but to sit down and eat. But are we—we, higher intellects—much different? We are satisfied the moment we call the thing that puzzles us some sonorous name. We mistake a name for a revelation. We do not care to go behind a name. All our explanations of the mysterious phenomena of the world are mere dictionary definitions.

And of all the questions of the human mind this is the most futile. The Whatness, the real inward essence, of a thing no mind can penetrate. We see two bits of metal attracting each other; outwardly we discern no difference between them, but as one rushes towards the other we behold the workings of a tremendous force which resides in the recesses of the one—an affinity, a courtship, between matter and matter. Does it help much that we call this force, this impetuous courtship, by the name of magnetism? We see the lightning flash across the sky;—does it help much that we call the spark which leaps forth out of the burning heart of the stormcloud by the name of electricity? What is electric'ity, magnetism, matter, force, or the rest of the scientific nomenclature? It is What! Mere names these are; yet the universe is not a dictionary—it is a Bible, a revelation! Verily, science must give up its pretense that by giving names to things it has explained them. Science should rigl'y busy itself only with the How of things. To the How-question science can give a satisfactory answer. How did nature evolve into its present stage? how do forces work? Science is on fairly firm ground in trying to satisfy our curiosity as to these and similar questions. For science is descriptive; it can describe for us the processes of nature; it is not revelatory—it cannot determine for us the realities behind the natural manifestations. The How, and not the What, is science's proper province.

Contrast with this the case of Religion. The proper province of Religion is not the How but the What. Religion in its earlier days, indeed, attempted to reach a conclusion as to the creative process; but it has now come to be recognized that the business of religion is not so much to tell how things came to be but what reality is there behind and in the phenomena of our world. And Religion gives its answer unequivocally when it calls that reality—God. Will you say that this is again naught but a name? It certainly is the Name above all names; but to the religious mind it is more than a name—it is the Ultimate Truth, the Last Meaning, of all existence. It is not a mere name like Force, or Gravitation, or Eon; because, standing over against these, the human intellect still asks baffled, What are they? while standing over against God we can at any rate say that He is Supreme Intelligence; and, because, while our mind does not rest at ease in the notion of Force and the like, but asks further questions, it does rest at ease in the conception of such a Supreme Intelligence, since beyond it the finite understanding cannot reach. But granted it were merely a name, even then we should give preference to this Name over the names proposed by science, because it is One while the others are many. We should at any rate want to know why it is that science in its confusion must take recourse to so many names while Religion subsumes the mystery of existence under One Name which contains in itself the meaning of all else.

Should it however be objected that we know as little about God as about Force then the answer should be that, since we cannot hope to solve the riddle of being in a demonstrable way, the best that the human mind can ever hope to do is to flee from the larger perplexity to the lesser perplexity. Since in the face of the mystery of existence the direct vision of the Whatness of the Universe is withheld from us, we should choose that explanation of the world which is more intelligible to us. Now as between the scientific explanation that the world reveals naught but blind Force working mechanically and the religious explanation that the world is eloquent of Supreme Reason working ethically, the latter seems to us more in keeping with our own intellectual and moral nature, and hence is more acceptable. From the very dawn of creation men have been pointing to the sky and its wonders, to the north and its glories, to the deep and its mysteries, asking: "What is this?" And science, like those famished desert-wanderers of old, said in effect: "It is What!" But comes Religion and, recognizing the heavenly origin of the Whatness of all things, illumines the darkness by firmly declaring: "It is God!"

On the first of November last twenty-three Jewish soldiers had received the Iron Cross of the first class and four thousand seven hundred and sixty-six that of the second class. Other military distinctions were bestowed upon five hundred and eighty-nine Jews. In Prussian regiments there are now 483 Jewish officers; in Bavarian, 176; in Wuerttemberg, 21, and in Saxon, 21. The Jewish dead comprised 2,070. We are indebted for these figures to Mr. Jacques Mayer, who translated them from the Juedische Volkszeitung of Breslau.

The Jewish friendly societies occupy a distinct place in the communal structure of Anglo-Jewry. They are a considerable benefit to those affiliated with them, and thus to the community of which they are a part. By reason of the benefits which they annually dispense among their members, the widowed and the orphaned, they relieve much distress and enable many persons to tide over their affairs in days of penury. The friendly societies, of course, recruit their strength from among the poorer and humbler classes in the community and answer the purposes of lodge, club, insurance company, and fraternal haven to them. A recent Anglo-Jewish writer has investigated the extent and condition of the Jewish societies of this class in Great Britain and Ireland, and he finds that their seven principal divisions comprise no less than 310 branches, have a gross membership of nearly 32,000 persons, and invested funds totaling nearly £81,000. Added to these facts is the circumstance that these bodies take in yearly from those affiliated with them some £60,000, which is expended for a very large variety of activities, but mainly for eleemosynary relief of one form or another. These friendly societies therefore amply justify their existence. In this country, where happily no distinction of class exist, there is nothing exactly comparable to the Anglo-Jewish friendly societies. Yet, the great Jewish fraternal orders of the United States are, in a sense, their counterpart, and exceed their beneficence many times.

Judge Mayer Sulzberger has finally retired from the bench of the Court of Common Pleas of Philadelphia, which he graced for upwards of twenty years, with the gratitude and amid the plaudits of all sections of his fellow citizens. His judicial work appears to have been of that rare quality which those, knowing him from his communal endeavors, expected to find in him. He ascended the bench from a vast and lucrative practice and now, in all probability, returns to the interesting scene of his former triumphs. We trust his philosophic outlook on the manifestations of life, Jewish and non-Jewish, will abide with us in his own person for many years to come and that now, with greater leisure and a relief from all official tasks, he will peruse those books of Jewish lore for which we have been waiting so long, well knowing that he is qualified to produce them.

LEHABDIL.

There came to this country some sixty-five years ago a man until that time comparatively unknown in these parts. In his native land he had studied deeply his own nation's history and literature, and combined that of his people—the Jews. His knowledge added to his personality, at once attractive, and eventually magnetic, served to win for him early staunch friends and admirers. His sincerity of purpose betokened a great career in such public life as the ministry indicates.

This same man went to another European country, and from thence, after having made his mark by qualities, characteristics an unflinching sincerity, and a love of truth which knew no measure, was called here to a ministry and a pulpit, at once honorable, but requiring almost every minute of time by its varied character and its constant demands upon the incumbent, from the sphere of Hazzan, of preacher, of educational leader, and what not else. But then, of what avail was this alone, despite all its demands, to a man who felt that the whole Jewish community must be his obligation; that he must devote every effort to its maintenance in purity, in adherence to Judaism and Jewish teachings, and to its uplift before the world at large? What was a single congregation (howsoever most detached he must be to that special object), when Jewry in general must be the incentive to all effort? Therefore, with a will unchecked, with an energy indomitable, every phase of labor for others was met and pursued. In charity works, in educational spheres, in literary labor, in writing, in preaching, in visiting, in advising, in what not, this man labored, always inspiring a sense of the highest respect, because of his course, so marked by an earnestness and unobtrusiveness, while really accomplishing big things, to which he never pointed, but which shone out in evidence all the time.

But to tell of it all! And then the subject, were he with us, would have none of it, just because of his innate modesty and desire to be in the background, while his own individuality placed him in the foreground. In the city to which he gave for nearly half a century his unremitting labors, there is scarce an institution that has not reaped benefits therefrom. His name became a household word there, even among gentiles, by whom he was equally beloved as by Jews.

But not enough. In his old age he begat a Benjamin. With his lifeblood he gave all to this new child: he reared him up; he tended him like a loving father does a favorite son; he gave him his sap. His example and his name made for vitality. "Show your colors," he lived by; "show your colors" his Benjamin must inherit. When the physical was fast ebbing away, the spiritual rose higher and higher, and when, alas, the untiring laborer was called to The Lord's own vineyard, he left behind him a heritage—a Benjamin.

But then Benjamin of old was likened to the animal that "devoureth his prey and divideth the spoil." Was that the sort of Benjamin the devoted man of righteousness had begotten? God forbid! Yet everything changed. The physical man had departed. Had the spiritual all gone with him?

Another man came on. We need say no more! Lehabdil! * *

The Jew to Be the Scapegoat!

The recrudescence of anti-Semitism in Germany is an ominous sign for the Central Powers. It apparently indicates that those who are in control, that is the Junker class, foresee ultimate defeat and are preparing in Russian fashion to make the Jews the scapegoat upon whom to unload their sins. In no other way can the attitude of the Tages-Zeitung, the chief organ of the Junkerthum, be accounted for. It has been expressing dissatisfaction at the part taken by Jews in the present war, and is throwing doubt upon the loyalty and valor of the Jewish soldiers. If this is not the case, however, it is hard to explain the anti-Semitic outbreak. Germany has not so many friends in the United States that it can afford to alienate any of them.—American Israelite.

School Teachers Aid War Sufferers.

The People's Relief Committee has received through S. Hirshansky, principal P. S. No. 4, $600, which was contributed toward the fund for the relief of the Jewish war sufferers by public school teachers. Those who were mainly instrumental in gathering the money are: Dorothy Bildersee, Minnie Ikelheimer, B. Frances Kaufman, Regina Lambert, Dora N. Rich, Theresa Seligman, Jeannette Seligman, Belle Strauss, Harriet Lowenstein, Max Radin and Jacob Shufro.

The New Big Idea in Motion Pictures

A Million Dollar Scenario''

Scene 1.—You see an interesting story on the Screen. One thousand feet of film flash before your eyes. Sixteen pictures to the foot of film. Sixteen thousand animated photographs to the reel. Many reels in each show. You usually get your money's worth.

Scene 2.—Movie films are purchased in blank. The pictures are printed later. Millions of feet of film used each year. Costs a tremendous amount of money. Moving Picture Producers try hard to cut the cost of film. Years of thought and study. Success at last. The New Big Idea!

Scene 3.—DUPLEX (The New Big Idea). Prints two pictures in the place of one. Makes each reel of film do double work. Doesn't disturb the present method of taking Motion Pictures nor the equipment necessary for showing the pictures. Thirty-two pictures to each foot instead of sixteen. Cuts the cost right in half. Millions spent for film each year. See the saving?

Scene 4.—Experienced Motion Picture men form Company which controls the Duplex System. Will make pictures by new process. Outlook good for Big Profits. Many thoughtful men see opportunity to make money by investing a few dollars now in the Company which controls "The New Big Idea." Large investors and small investors have equal opportunity.

Part II.—This interesting story is continued in greater detail in a Booklet entitled "The New Big Idea." We will mail it to any one interested in sharing in Duplex Profits.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

Apricot Whip.
Steam a quarter of a pound of softened dried apricots and chop them fine. Beat the whites of four eggs very stiff and add a quarter of a cupful of sugar, beating all the time, and gradually the chopped apricots. Pour into a buttered pudding dish and bake slowly until light and firm. Serve either cold or hot with whipped cream. If served cold, it must be cooled very gradually so that it will not fall and it must be slowly and carefully baked.

Endive and Grape Fruit Salad.
Cut the grape fruit in halves and remove the pulp with a spoon, being careful not to break the carapels any more than possible. Mix with French dressing. Arrange in a bowl with a border of endive, so placed as to make it easily served with the grape fruit. Garnish with small green lettuce leaves. If desired the endive may be cut in pieces and mixed with the grape fruit.

Cauliflower au Gratin.
One cauliflower, one-half pint of sauce, two ounces of cheese (grated). Boil the cauliflower carefully. Prepare the sauce. Pour the sauce, to which has been added half the cheese, over the cauliflower and sprinkle the rest of the cheese on top. Place the dish under the grill or in front of a bright, hot fire until the cheese browns slightly.

Fried Rice.
One cupful of rice in three pints of boiling water. Add pinch of salt and boil rapidly for half an hour. Drain thoroughly in colander, then put the rice two inches thick into dish, put a weight on top and allow to become cold. Cut into slices and dip alternately into crumbs and eggs, and fry in deep hot vegetable oil. This is nice served with syrup.

Eggs Stuffed with Cheese.
Cut six hard-boiled eggs in halves crosswise, remove the yolks, mash them and add three tablespoonfuls of grated cheese, one teaspoonful of vinegar, one-half teaspoonful salt, one-half of a teaspoonful of mustard, a few grains of cayenne and enough melted butter or olive oil to make a paste. Shape into balls, refill the whites and serve with cress or lettuce.

Boiled Rice.
One-half pound rice, one-quarter teaspoonful salt, four quarts boiling water. Well wash the rice in cold water, then put it into the boiling water with the salt, and let it boil fast fifteen to twenty minutes. When it is quite tender, strain it into a colander, turn the cold water tap on to it for two or three seconds. Then place it in a dry saucepan by the side of the fire, with the lid half on, to dry and get hot. Shake it occasionally to prevent it burning, and serve.

Fried Vegetable Marrow.
One vegetable marrow, two ounces flour, one-half gill tepid water, one dessertspoonful salad oil, salt, white of one egg. Put the flour into a basin with a pinch of salt, add the oil and tepid water gradually, then the white of egg, well beaten. Peel the marrow, put it into boiling water, and boil until tender. Cut it into slices, remove the seeds, dip each piece in the batter, and fry in hot fat or oil a golden brown.

Lettuce Salad.
One lettuce, one-quarter beetroot, one bunch cress, one-half bunch radishes, one egg, pepper and salt to taste, one-quarter teaspoonful strong mustard, two tablespoonfuls salad oil, three tablespoonfuls vinegar. Wash the lettuce thoroughly, pull it to pieces with the fingers, dry it in a coarse cloth. Wash the radishes, halve them; wash and pick the cress. Boil the egg hard, cut the white into pieces, and mix it with the salad. Pass the yolk through a sieve, and mix carefully with it the pepper, salt, mustard, oil and vinegar. This dressing should be poured over the salad and very thoroughly mixed with it. Ornament with small pieces of beetroot. If preferred, use three tablespoonfuls of oil to two of vinegar.

Directly tea is spilled on a tablecloth cover the stain with common salt. Leave it for a while, and when the cloth is washed all stains will have disappeared.

Smoked Haddie in Cream.
Tear haddies into small strips or cut into cubes; wash and place in basin with quart of water; let it simmer one-half an hour, then pour off the water and add one pint of fresh milk. When it comes to a boil, thicken with one spoonful of flour, let it boil five minutes and add butter (size of a walnut), and a little pepper, and serve.

Alexandra Salad.
Heart of lettuce, filled with sliced grape fruit, julienne of celery, grapes cut in halves, and chopped walnuts. Serve with Rossetti's French Salad Dressing.

Pickled Onions.

One quart of onions, one pint vinegar, one-eighth ounce pepper-corns, salt and water, one-half ounce ginger. Peel the onions, and when some water with plenty of salt in it is boiling pour it over them, and let them remain in it twenty-four hours. Keep them close covered till all the steam has evaporated. After twenty-four hours wipe them dry. Boil the vinegar, pepper and ginger together, and pour this over the onions. Cover tightly, and keep them several weeks before using.

While finnan haddie as we know it is nothing more or less than smoked haddock, at the same time this delicious combination of the sea and the smokehouse varies so that it is just as necessary to secure it from a reliable dealer as it is to purchase butter, eggs, etc., from one.

For over thirty-five years the Thomas Smith finnan haddies have had a reputation for quality and evenness that is unrivaled. They use none but selected fresh haddock, and their clean and sanitary process of curing retains the peculiar tang which is so fancied by epicures.

Good finnan haddie, such as the Thomas Smith brand, is a delight at all times. It makes a delicious breakfast, lunch or dinner, and can be used in endless ways, being just as good whether boiled, broiled, creamed, baked or served cold in a salad. The Thomas Smith brand of finnan haddies, as well as smoked salmon, smoked halibut, smoked whitefish, mild cured bloaters, kippered herring, smoked mackerel and salt codfish and sounds may be obtained at the Thomas Smith stand in Washington Market.

A "PRAYER" IN SING SING.

By JACOB RICHMAN.

It was a calm and starry night. The moon looked lovely as it glanced and gleamed on the placid waters of the Hudson. The air on the heights of Ossining was odorless with the sweet perfumes of blossoms and freshly mowed hay. Strange, dreamlike and mysterious were all things around. Within the large, tall prison walls a deathlike silence prevailed: The dim lights within the cavellike cells had already been extinguished. The great majority of the seventeen hundred convicts were asleep and dreaming of a happier future, with more air and more freedom, or, perhaps, of their loved ones, whom they left helpless at home.

At intervals multitudinous echoes arose and died in the distance. It was the responsive reading of the Jewish congregation, who were assembled in the spacious meeting hall for their weekly services, and who were given the privilege to leave their cells for this purpose.

The hall was dimly lighted, which added greatly to the mysteriousness and solemnity of the place. The 200 members of the "congregation" sat orderly and respectfully, occupying the nearest available seats to the pulpit. A breathless, ominous and depressing silence filled the air. It was the silence preceding a storm. The following day a convict was to be executed, at which event the prison is transformed into a pandemonium. We all feel sad to hear that the State takes a strong, normal man with hopes, ambitions and associations, crushes life out of him and turns him into a heap of putrifying, decaying substance. But one cannot realize the full horror of the fact unless one happens to be a fellow convict or is at least found within the prison confines. The tragic act which was to be performed the subsequent day was deeply engraved on the worshippers' faces and clearly reflected in their demeanor. They appeared meditative, sentimental and melancholy. It was the gravest and most attentive audience any house of prayer ever contained within its walls.

All eyes were fixed on the chaplain, to whom they looked for words of hope and consolation. A spirit of mutual love, understanding and perfect comradeship permeated all. They were bound by a common belief and a common misfortune. The topic of the rabbi's sermon that evening was "Moses."

"There is not a man on earth," began

Dr. Hyamson Resumes Preaching

Rev. Dr. Moses Hyamson having recovered from his unfortunate accident of seven weeks previous, again occupied the pulpit of Orach Chaim Congregation last Sabbath, where a large congregation was present to greet him. Dr. Hyamson's sermon was in the nature of a thanksgiving for having fully recovered and was as follows:

"My first duty is to offer thanksgiving to the Almighty for having rescued me seven weeks ago, from the very jaws of death, for having speedily restored me to convalescence and enabled me to occupy once more the pulpit of my beloved congregation. When I recall the imminent peril from which I was providentially saved, the words of the Hallel come to my mind and lips: 'Return, O my soul, to thy quietude; for the Lord hath dealt bountifully with thee. Thou hast delivered my soul from death, my eyes from tears, my feet from falling. I shall walk before the Lord in the lands of the living' (P's. 116, 7-9). On this, the first Sabbath after an interval of enforced absence on which I am again privileged to address you, I would invite your attention to the consideration of a psalm of thanksgiving, which begins, 'Give thanks to the Lord, for he is good; for His mercy endureth forever.' The psalm which I have in mind is not that which we recite every Sabbath morning (P's. 136), and which is known as the Hallel Hagadol—the great Hallel, because every verse ends with the refrain, 'For His mercy endureth forever.' Nor am I thinking of the collection of psalms which we sing on festivals and new moons (P's. 113-118), and which is called the Hallel Hamitzri, the Egyptian Hallel, because it has a reference to the departure from Egypt and its consummation, the crossing of the Red Sea. The psalm to which I refer is the first in the fifth, which is the last book of the Psalter. It is numbered 107, and consists of forty-three verses. Its characteristic peculiarity lies in the fact that, besides its brief introduction of three verses and longer peroration of eleven verses (33-43), it falls into four divisions, each of which has as its preultimate verse the refrain, 'They shall give thanks unto the Lord for his kindness and His wonders to the children of men' (verses 7, 15, 21, 31). The psalm describes four classes of perils and vicissitudes to which human beings are subject in the course of their lives. Travelers may go astray, and lose their way. 'They wander in the desert in the solitary path, they cannot find the way to an inhabited city, hungry and thirsty, their soul within them fainteth.' Let them, says the psalmist, not despair, nor consider their condition hopeless. 'They cry to God when they are in distress, and out of their straits He delivers them.' They are placed on the right road once more. Nor when out of danger shall they forget the duty of gratitude. 'They shall thank God for His loving kindness and His wonders to the children of men.' The psalmist then speaks of another class of unfortunate people—those that are in durance vile, behind the doors of a prison, flung into dark dungeons. 'They that sit in darkness and the shadow of death, bound in affliction and iron.' The psalmist does not regard them as victims of an untoward fate. They deserve punishment, 'because they have rebelled against the word of God and have defied the counsel of the Most High, He humbled their heart with trouble; they stumbled and there was none to help.' Yet they too, are not to despair. 'They cry to God in their distress. He saves them from their affliction. He brings them forth from darkness and the shadow of death. When released they must not forget the duty of gratitude. 'They shall thank God for His loving kindness and His wonders to the children of men.'

"The psalmist, in his fourth division, speaks of another class who encounter peril. 'They that go down to the sea in ships, and do work on the mighty waters. They behold the work of the Lord and His wonders in the mighty deep.' But a storm rises in midocean. The ship is tossed hither and thither; now lifted to heaven on the crest of a mountain-high wave, now flung to the depths in the trough of the ocean. The passengers reel and stagger. They should not despair. They cry to God in their distress. 'He calms the storm and stills the waves and guides the ship to its destined haven. When safe on shore, let the mariners and passengers not forget their recent peril. Their obligation is plain. 'They shall give thanks unto the Lord for His loving kindness and His wonders to the children of men.'

"One class of discomfort and danger which hardly any escape, the psalmist does not omit to mention—physical sickness. 'All food their soul absorbeth. They draw near the gates of death.' These, too, stricken by illness are not to despair. 'When they cry to God in their distress, He will save them from their affliction. He sends His word and heals them and stored to health, let them fulfill their manifest duty. 'They shall give thanks to the Lord for His loving kindness and His wonders to the children of men.'

"This psalm which I have just analyzed is significant because, based on its contents and especially its leitmotif, the refrain four times recurring, 'They shall give thanks to the Lord for His loving kindness and His wonders to the children of men,' our wise men have set up the rule of Jewish life that four classes of individuals owe a duty of thanksgiving—those who return from a long journey, those who have crossed the sea, prisoners after their release, and the sick when they have been restored to normal health. And because in this psalm the verse occurs, 'Thou shalt exalt Him in the congregation of the people' (v. 32), the sages drew the further deduction that the fulfillment of this duty must be public. The declaration of thanksgiving must be made at a meeting of a congregation. Hence the special benediction, 'Blessed art thou, O Lord our God, king of the universe, who vouchsafest benefits to the undeserving, you hast also bestowed upon me all good,' recited in synagogue after being called to the Law by those who have escaped peril.

"The psalmist is apparently rather hard upon the sick. The section referring to this category of unfortunates begins, 'The fools, because of their transgression and as a consequence of their iniquities, are afflicted.' Does not this verse betray a lack of sympathy with those upon whom God has laid the hand of affliction? Is it not too sweeping a condemnation of the disabled to put them almost in the same class with criminals who expiate their offenses in the prison house?

"What light do our teachers throw on these questions? The problem of sickness and suffering exercised their minds, and they have given expression to various views on the theme. One dictum seems to be in agreement with the psalmist's harsh pronouncement. It is as follows: 'There is no death without sin; no suffering without fault.' (T. B. Sabbath, 55a.) A moment's reflection will show that this is true in a large number of instances. Defiance of the laws of nature, excessive indulgence in food, drink and other bodily gratifications are sins and transgressions that carry their inevitable penalty. 'A man can dig his grave with his teeth,' is a familiar proverb. Vice, in its various forms, bears within itself the seeds of disease and death. But those who live clean, sober and temperate lives are also often stricken down. Are they, too, 'fools afflicted because of their transgressions and iniquities'? Some of our wise men would justify the ways of God to man by the assumption that these sober and temperate folk are afflicted as a punishment for sins they have committed against God and their fellow men. There is a beautiful story of Nachum, the man of Gamzu or Gimzu. (Gimzu is a town in Palestine from which Nachum came. He is called, according to the Talmud, the man of Gamzu, because of the phrase always on his lips, Gam zu letovah ('This visitation is also for good.') When Nachum was once on a journey, a poor man accosted him and asked him for help. 'Wait,' replied the sage, 'till I have loosened the girths of this ass, on which I have been riding, and remove its burden.' When the beast had been relieved, Nachum turned to the stranger. But it was too late. In the short interval that had elapsed, the poor man had died of hunger. Nachum subsequently fell sick. His colleagues and disciples, relatives and friends who visited him com-miserated with him on his sufferings. 'Woe to us that we see thee in such a sad state.' 'Woe would it have been to me,' the rabbi replied, 'if you had not seen me in this state.' Nachum of Gamzu, who had become totally blind, had lost the use of both his hands and feet, whose body was covered with boils, accepted his terrible visitation as an expiation of his sin against the poor man! (Taanith, 21.) Still this view, it was felt, does not apply to all cases. At least the majority are not as sensitive as was Nachum of Gamzu. When stricken with illness, we do not always realize that we have committed offenses meriting severe punishment. Our wise men fall back on the doctrine of 'Chastisements of Love.' 'If a man finds that afflictions come upon him, let him examine his ways, even as Jeremiah, the prophet of Calamity, exhorted his contemporaries, 'Let us examine our ways and search them and return to the Lord' (I. am. 3, 40). If self-examination has yielded no results, let the subject of suffering attribute his afflictions to the neglect of the Torah—His standard of conduct may be too low. He may not know what it is that the Lord requires of him—'If this is not the reason, let him accept his sufferings in a spirit of resignation, regarding them as a mark of divine favor. He whom God loves, he rebukes.' (T. B. Berachot, 5a.) Many, however, objected to these proofs of special divine favor. R. Chanina visits R. Johanan when he is sick. 'Are you contented with your sufferings?' asks the visitor. 'Not with them nor with the recompense for patiently enduring them,' is delivers them from their graves.' Re-R. Jochanan's reply.

May I suggest the following as a plain statement that sums up the various Talmudic theories, may possibly satisfy the craving of the heart to the questions Why is there suffering; what is its meaning and purpose, and, at the same time, may justify the psalmist's condemnation of the sick as 'fools afflicted because of their transgressions.'

If we all led normal lives, if we never transgressed the laws laid down in God's Revealed Truth, and in His Book of Nature, we would never be sick. We would realize the promise 'And ye shall serve the Lord, your God, and He will bless thy bread and thy water, and I will remove sickness from thy midst.' (Exodus 23:24.) But this consummation, devoutly to be wished, has not yet been attained. We are children of the dust, creatures of clay, ignorant, weak, inclined to yield to the impulse of the moment. We sin wittingly and unwittingly, willingly and unwillingly, precipitately and deliberately and ever against our better judgment, with knowledge and of malice aforethought. The psalmist is right when he says, 'The fools are afflicted because of their transgressions.' Again, we are the heirs of the ages for good and for evil. 'The fathers have eaten sour grapes; the children's teeth are set on edge.' Furthermore, man is a social creature. We enjoy the advantages and suffer the drawbacks of a highly complex civilization. Dereliction of duty, want of vigilance, on the part of the administrators or even minor officials of the state may cause an epidemic that sweeps away the innocent. We live massed together in communities, and we have to bear each other's burdens. And so the psalmist is justified when he speaks in the plural, 'Fools, because of their transgressions, are afflicted.'

'Still, let this thought comfort us: 'Everything tends to good.' The epidemic of typhoid that devastates a district is a signal of alarm, calling attention to pollution of the streams, wells or reservoirs that supply the first necessity of life to the inhabitants of the state. And so, too, illness is a warning that one has gone astray, that he has sinned against God's law, that he has committed an error in food, drink or mode of life. A breakdown is a clear indication that the strength has been overtaxed. And so a timely sickness is itself God's angel, which he sends to heal us of our infirmities and save us from untimely death. 'He sends His word and heals them and delivers them from their graves.' All sufferings is thus 'chastisement of love,' inflicted by the Father of all upon His children for their good.

Sickness is a blessing in disguise in other ways. It makes us realize not only our own weakness, but also the strength and nobility of human nature. What is sweeter and more gracious than the love and sympathy and helpful kindness bestowed upon those confined to the sick chamber? It is in sickness that one learns to appreciate the skill and experience, the care and devotion of those noble men who devote their careers to the Ministry of Health. Undeniable, certainly, is the influence of mind on body. When R. Jochanan tells his visitor, R. Chanina, that he is impatient of suffering, the latter says, 'Give me thy hand.' The patient does so, and is helped to rise. And the pain and weakness disappear. So strong is will power in resisting and repelling disease. Still Judaism, ever sane and sensible, has never accepted the faith cure. When disabled by accident or grave illness, we must have recourse to the medical practitioner. The physician has his honored position in the Jewish system. One is forbidden to reside in a place where medical assistance is not accessible. 'Honor the physician' is the counsel of Ben Sirah. Most important of all, when prostrated by physical infirmity, we remember God, the great physician. We cry to the Lord to save us from our distress. He send His word and heals us and delivers us from the grave. When we have recovered, our duty is to 'Give thanks to the Lord for His loving kindness and His wonders to the children of men.'

'One word in conclusion. This psalm appeals to the individual. It also has its appeal to the entire nation and to the whole of humanity. It begins, 'Give thanks to the Lord, for He is good; for His mercy endureth forever. The redeemed of the Lord shall say it, whom He has delivered from the hand of the foe.' The psalm ends with a meditation on peoples and countries and the changes and vicissitudes they experience. It tells how towns and villages are wasted and fields are ravaged and turned to deserts, and how these deserts are again cultivated and settled with thriving population. At this time our minds turn to the cities in the Old World that have been ruined, to the villages and hamlets that have been laid waste, to the fields ravaged, to the precious blood poured out wantonly like water spilled on the ground that none can gather up again. At this period of storm and stress, we nevertheless look forward hopefully to the day when the fever of hatred now raging in the veins of eleven nations will have burned itself out and peoples and rulers will have recovered their sanity, and the curse of war from which mankind has been suffering for over a year with all its terrible evils for humanity generally, and especially for our people, ever between the hammer and the anvil, will cease and be followed by the blessing of permanent peace. Then will Israel and all humanity 'give thanks to the Lord for His loving kindness and His wonders to the children of men.' Amen.'

The Immigration Situation in Seattle, Wash.

As a direct result of the war, a situation has developed with surprising suddenness in Seattle, Wash., to meet which required immediate and energetic efforts on the part of the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society.

Seattle, the largest city in the State Washington, and situated on the Pacific coast, had little immigration, Jewish or non-Jewish, within recent years. Suddenly, like a bolt from the sky, Jewish refugees from Russia began landing in great numbers. Within less than two months, several hundred immigrants arrived—practically all young men who had been drafted into the army. They came by way of Vladivostok, Harbin and Yokohama, the only available route afforded them at the present moment. These brought the news that about 500 were in Japanese ports awaiting an opportunity to embark for America. The rather small Jewish community at Seattle, when confronted with this, to them tremendous overflow, bravely did what it could to take the situation in hand.

A committee was at once formed, which included well known Jews of the city, and proceeded to organize the work of temporarily caring for the immigrants—housing them and seeing that they were properly taken care of. At this juncture, the committee realized how meager were its resources, and the information it possessed concerning immigration methods, and they telegraphed to Leon Sanders, the president of the society, for assistance and advice. Judge Sanders immediately sent several hundred dollars by wire, and called a conference of the directors of the society.

Meanwhile the state of things at Seattle had become more critical, with the steady arrival of new immigrants. At a conference of prominent Jews it was decided that the community seek the aid of the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society of America, which, with its vast experience and the amount of information at its command, would naturally be able to take charge of the situation and successfully solve the problems presented. A telegram to this effect was thereupon dispatched to the society. A representative was soon sent to Seattle, in the person of Jacob R. Fain, one of the active workers in the main office. Being well acquainted with the society's methods and policies, it did not take Mr. Fain long to convince Seattle Jewry that the best course to pursue was to have established in Seattle a branch of the national organization, which already has well organized branches at Philadelphia, Baltimore, Boston and San Francisco.

Only he has the right to hold tenaciously to an opinion, or to attempt to blaze new paths whose equipment and whose knowledge has given him a basis for independent judgment. Instinctively men look to the individuals behind the opinions, and the judgment of these, on the basis of qualification, is another restraint imposed by society against running off hopelessly in blind alleys. Only the individualism that faces in the direction of development, stability and progress gets a respectful hearing and from this angle the great majority of human kind are on the road to self-realism.—Rev. Samuel Koch, Seattle, Wash.

Toronto Treatments.
H. Winberg publisher of the local Yiddish Daily Journal, is a candidate on the Mayoralty ticket, assured by both Jews and Gentiles of successful results. This is, indeed, the first time in the history of the Jews of the Dominion to have a Jew nominated as the Mayor of a city like Toronto, the populace of which exceeds half a million. An editor of a Jewish paper and affiliated with numerous Jewish institutions, Mr. Winberg will certainly shed luster on his co-religionists and cast glory upon members of his race when properly ensconced in the City Hall as the Mayor of Toronto.

The Gemiluth Hessed Verein, known as the Toronto Free Loan Association had its newly elected officers installed on a recent Sunday night. The president, Emanuel I. Kenen, entertained the members, seventy-five in number, to a sumptuous supper, adding likewise spiritual and intellectual pabulum to the gastronomic and epicurean dainties. Rabbi Jacob Gordon, M. B. Nathanson, principal of the Toronto Hebrew Free School, and your correspondent being the cupbearers and having at the invitation of the host, Kenen, entertained the guests spiritually and intellectually on appropriate topics and timely themes.

The confirmation of Master Raphael Simonsky, son of Mr. and Mrs. Simon Simonsky, of 478 Brunswick street, was duly celebrated at the Goel Zedek, University Avenue Synagogue, Saturday, 18th of Tebeth, the confirmant declaiming the Pentateuchal selection and chanting the prophetic portion in traditional accordance with the sacred intonation and institutional modulations. Dr. Julius J. Price, the rabbi of the congregation, and the writer of these lines delivered addresses on the occasion. The father of the celebrant, in the course of the Sabbath readings, donated considerable sums for local, national and international institutions of education, philanthropy and religion.

The president of B'nai Zion Benefit Association, Mr. M. Rosin, invited your humble servant to address their meeting on Sunday, December 6, on "The Modern Development of Zionism." There and then, as a result of the $1,000,000 that was raised the other night at a mass meeting in New York, Rabbi Jacob Gordon instituted a campaign for the raising of an additional amount of $10,000 in the course of the festive days of the 15th of Shebat and Purim, to augment the fund for the relief of the victims of the European war. One noble act commissions another, and New York's wonderful initiative will become a model for copy and an object for imitation by hundreds and thousands of sister cities, both in the States and the Dominion. May God in His mercy bless both imitator and followers; may He also stay the hands of the fighting hosts and introduce universal peace. Amen.

B'nai Zion of Toronto is a force to reckon with, 300 members constituting the prime of Toronto Jewry and the cream of local society, and it was a pleasure for one, indeed, to face the audience of men of integrity, intelligence and intellect. They own a house valued at $35,000, making as it does the center of Toronto's Jewish gravitation and the quarters for all great undertakings and noble ventures. Small wonder then that the relief work owes its origin to the B'nai Zion and within its walls the idea was first broached.

While in Toronto your correspondent was royally entertained by Messrs. B.

MUSIC NOTES.

Those who are spending a Sunday evening in New York will find rare amusement at the Hippodrome, where John Philip Sousa is appearing regularly with his fine band. And that is not all. Charles Dillingham has provided a series of guest-stars and one or more famous operatic celebrities appear each Sunday with the March King. This notable list has already included Melba, Emmy Destinn, Alice Nielsen, the incomparable Pavlowa and the future promises of Julla Culp, Kathleen Parlow, Percy Grainger and other distinguished stars of the concert and operatic stage. New York musical writers pronounce this the most remarkable series of Sunday concerts ever arranged. For the current Sunday, Pavlowa will make her farewell appearance of the season.

Yielding to much persuasion by many people prominent in operatic and concert circles, Miss Rose Laurent, a young American soprano, has decided to give a recital at the Harris Theatre on Sunday night, February 6, at 8.15 p. m. A program of modern songs, some of which will on this occasion be given their first public hearing in America, will be given by Miss Laurent, who will be assisted by Clarence Adler at the piano.

Maximilian Pilzer, assisted by Charles Gilbert Spross at the piano, will give a violin recital in Aeolian Hall Monday evening, January 24. Mr. Pilzer's program, opening with the Tartini "Devil's Thrill," will have as its piece de resistance the Mozart Concerto in E flat major, and will include among other numbers the Beethoven Romanze in F major, the Bach-Schumann Gavotte, the Dvorak-Kreisler Slavonic Dance, Fritz Stahlberg's Bagatelle, a Chopin waltz, the Paganini "Witches' Dance," and Pilzer's own "Novelette."

At its second concert of the season in Aeolian Hall next Tuesday evening, the Adele Margulies Trio, which consists of Adele Margulies, pianist; Leopold Lichtenberg, violinist, and Alwin Schroeder, cellist, will present a program comprising Saint-Saens' Trio in F major, op. 18, Beethoven's Cello Sonata in A major, and Georg Schumann's Trio, op. 25, which has not yet been heard in this city. It is one of many chamber works written by this composer, who is known to American music lovers chiefly by his cantata, "Ruth." The Margulies Trio played a cello sonata of Schumann's some years ago.

On Wednesday afternoon, January 26, Robert Maitland, the English baritone, will give a recital in Aeolian Hall. The program will contain numbers by Bach, Schubert, Wolf, Brahms and the "Three Ghazals of Hafis the Persian Poet" (first time in America), by Granville Bantock.

Mischa Elman's next appearance in New York will be a violin recital in Carnegie Hall on Saturday afternoon, February 12, Lincoln's Birthday.

When Josef Hofmann gives his only recital of the season in Carnegie Hall on Saturday afternoon, January 29, he will class himself among the pianists who have arranged folk songs for the piano. He will play four Dutch songs for the first time. Other interesting numbers are in a modern group, the March From the Ruins of Athens, arranged by Rubinstein, and the Fledermaus Waltz, arranged by Godowsky. The big numbers are the Appassionata Sonata, by Beethoven, and the B flat minor sonata, by Chopin.

The one big, notable, enduring musical comedy success of the year in New York is Klaw and Erlanger's "Around the Map," now in its third month at the New Amsterdam Theatre, and this is not alone to the credit of the producers, but a tribute to the good taste of the public as well. At this time "Around the Map" is a particularly happy offering, since it gives the public, without risk, danger or annoyance, a glimpse of the European capitals now agitated by strife. The story of the play takes the theatergoer from Paris to Berlin, the Russo-German frontier, Petrograd, Port Arthur, San Francisco and New York. The creator of these scenes, Joseph Urban, is possibly the only living painter who beautifies to exquisiteness a production of this class by a fantastic imagination and whose methods, while distinctly modern, are never grotesque. It is late in the day to speak of C. M. S. McLellan, the librettist of "Around the Map," but it will suffice, perhaps, to recall that he wrote those wonderfully popular Klaw and Erlanger productions, "The Pink Lady," "Oh, Oh, Delphine," and "The Little Cafe." The composer of "Around the Map" is Herman Finck, the man of the hour in musical circles in London. You probably recall his song, "In the Shadows," which has sold up into the millions. In the new musical play, which, by the by, is appropriately styled "a musical globe trot," he is at his best.

"The Princess Pat," John Cort's production of Henry Blossom and Victor Herbert's delightful comic opera, will begin the seventeenth week of its highly successful engagement at the Cort Theatre, Monday night. All of the excellent singers and funmakers of the original cast remain intact, including Eleanor Painter, Sam B. Hardy, Al Shean, Alexander Clark, Joseph R. Lertora, Robert Ober, Louis Casavant, Eva Fallon, Leonora Novasio, Martin Haydon, Ralph Riggs and Katharine Witchie.

"The Unchastened Woman," Louis K. Anspacher's successful comedy drama, in which Emily Stevens is starring, will enter upon the fifteenth week of its run at the Thirty-ninth Street Theatre Monday night. Business is so satisfactory for this attraction that there is little doubt it will remain throughout the season. The supporting cast still includes Christine Norman, H. Reeves-Smith, Harward Short, Louis Bennison, Isabel Richards, Jennie Lamont and Almee Delmores.

Oliver Morosco will present a new four-act comedy by Edward Childs Carpenter, entitled "The Cinderella Man," a sort of fairy tale, at the Fulton Theatre, beginning Monday night. In the cast will be Shelley Hull, Phoebe Foster, Frank Bacon, Reginald Mason, Charles Lane, Berton Churchill, Hubert Wilke, Theodore Babcock, Percival T. Moore, Lillian Dix and Helen Turney. The scenes of the play are laid in New York, the time being the present. Matinees Wednesday and Saturday.

CHILDREN'S PAGE

GUARD THY TONGUE!

Dear Children:

I have omitted many chapters of the Menorath Hamaor, treating of the various forbidden pleasures. I hope you will learn to read and understand Hebrew and will read the entire Menorath Hamaor in the original, then you will understand why the Jewish nation, in spite of the terrible persecutions they have been subjected to these thousands of years, is yet the longest-lived and healthiest of all the nations upon the face of the globe. And now we will let the second lamp of the seven lamps shed its light upon us and illuminate the greatest gift of the Holy One to mankind—Speech!

"My child," says the Menorath Hamaor, "I will teach thee ten rules how to guard thy tongue—the first rule, not to sit with the scoffers; the second rule, not to tell a lie; the third rule, not to flatter; the fourth rule, not to slander; the fifth rule, not to put one to shame in public; the sixth rule, not to reveal secrets; the seventh rule, not to quarrel; the eighth rule, not to fill one's mouth with boisterous laughter; the ninth rule, not to mention the Divine name in vain; the tenth rule, not to speak of that which leads to profanation of the Divine name."

The blessed Creator endowed us with speech in order that we may converse of such matters that are of benefit to our body and soul. To our body in that which pertains to our livelihood, our food and drink, our clothing and all our necessities; to our soul in the performance of the commandments, to read the written and oral Law which is the foundation of preservation of all the commandments; also to thank the blessed Creator for all the good that he does for us at all times and bless Him for all the things that He causes us to enjoy in this world, and to pray unto Him and entreat His grace and supplicate Him for all our necessities with a perfect heart and with humility, and then the Lord will answer us as it is written (Psalms 145): "The Lord is nigh unto all them that call upon Him." "He does not despise the broken and contrite heart" (Psalms 51). And if one merits to attain the highest degree of the excellence of speech, to learn the Torah and to teach it, to expound the Law and instruct the erring ones by praising the good actions and moral qualities, and holding up to contempt the actions that are evil and the propensities that are immoral, happy is such a person and blessed is his portion, for he makes himself and others meritorious. They are all called His children and the works of His hands. The fact is that the mouth was created to learn the Torah and its commandments, and it should be hardly necessary to warn a man not to occupy his time with vain words, for the day is short and the labor great, and one cannot afford to lose his time in foolish talk. And it would surely seem to be entirely unnecessary to warn a person against speaking that which is forbidden and contemptible, for even a beast chooses the good and rejects the evil in as far as it can attain the good. How much more so should a man, gifted with Divine intelligence, understanding what is good and what is evil, keep his mouth holy and guard it from words of folly, especially from the speech that is forbidden? The lips that were created for sacred speech should not allow vain words to pass over them. And thus said Rabbi Levi: "If I had been on Mount Sinai I would pray to the Almighty to give man two mouths," so that the mouth with which he talks holy words should not be used for the vanity of the world. And our pious men of ancient times have acted as though they were ministering angels and considered their mouths as sacred vessels for Divine service, which should not be used for profane purposes, excepting when their physical requirements made it very necessary. "All speech is bad," says the Talmud, "except the discourse of the Torah; all silence is good, except silence concerning the Divine Law!" However, when our ancient Sages saw how weak are the minds of men, and not enough that they use their tongue which was created for intellectual discourse, for nonsensical talk, but they open their mouths wide to speak that which is forbidden. And although the tongue is soft and inclosed within a double inclosure, still the people sharpen it as the sharpest of arrows and talk therewith words that are highly injurious to mankind. They reproved and instructed that it should be well guarded. Said Rabbi Jochanan in the name of Rabbi Jose Ben Zamra: "What means King David by saying 'What will he give unto thee? or what will he add unto thee, thou tongue of deceit?'" (Psalms 120). "Said the Holy One, blessed be He, to the tongue: 'All members of the human body are erect and thou art recumbent, all the members of the human body are without and thou art within, and, furthermore, I have encircled thee with two towers of bone (the teeth) and the other of flesh (the lips). What more shall I add to guard thee or thou tongue of deceit?'" Rabbi Eleazar, in the name of Rabbi Jose Ben Zamra, also said: "There are two hundred and forty-eight members in the human body, some erect and some recumbent, and this tongue is placed between two cheeks and a stream of water flows underneath (the saliva), and is doubly guarded (by the teeth and lips), and yet come and see how many conflagrations it causes (the fires of passion and quarrels), if it were in an erect posture how much worse it would be!" "Four classes," our Rabbins tell us, "will not behold the Divine Presence—scoffers, flatterers, liars and slanderers," and they bring appropriate sentences from the Holy Scriptures to prove the truth of their words.
