A
Modern Story

HER ONLY SON

By
F. C. Ehrlich

"And Mr. Joe will surely be here for dinner tonight?"

Mrs. Lewis smiled, a radiant, contented smile, which was at the same time peculiarly maternal. "Yes; his letter here says he'll come on the four o'clock train. I know you will have something nice for dinner, Mary."

Mary nodded as she smoothed her neat apron complacently. She was a red-cheeked Irish woman of the type that seems to have been born at the age of twenty-five and never grows any older. "After I've been with you, Mrs. Lewis, these past sixteen years, long before Mr. Joe started to his college to learn to be a rabbi, I guess I ought to know that he's crazy for blueberry pie, but won't ever eat tomato soup, the same as if I was his mother. And a home-made meal will taste good to him, poor lad, after his boarding-house stuff all winter." She lingered at the door a moment to look up at the picture of a strong-faced young man hanging above the fireplace. "Sure," she said a trifle timidly, for, good friends as they were, mistress and maid seldom crossed a certain invisible barrier between them, "sure, and it would have pleased Dr. Lewis to know that his son was ready to be a rabbi like he was."

Mrs. Lewis' eyes usually quietly stern in their level gaze, softened as she, too, looked up at the picture. "It was his wish," she said gently, "that Joseph should be a rabbi; perhaps preach some day in Dorton, where we were married, where he was rabbi when he died." Her firm mouth trembled a little. "I should like to go back to Dorton and keep house for Joseph," she murmured, more to the picture than to the woman at the door. Then she threw back her shoulders, still finely erect under her shabby black gown, and her eyes became keen once more. "Get anything you want from the butcher today, Mary," she ordered. "Maybe chops would be best, if you have them rare, the way Joe likes them, and baked potatoes and a salad. We'll have a real company dinner tonight," she ended gayly.

But left alone, the brightness died out of her face and a look of happiness so brooding and tender that it was almost wistful took its place. She looked again at her husband's picture; then began to reread Joseph's letter, characteristically short, scrawled at the breakfast table on a page torn from his notebook. "It is a shame you couldn't come up for the graduation," it ran, "for I wanted all my friends to meet you. But next year I'll be making a good salary and can be doing things for you for a change. And it's nice of you to say you feel repaid because I'm val-

ent. She closed her eyes and shivered a little as she recalled those first dreadful years of loneliness, those hours of doubt that Joseph, needing a father's care, was growing reckless and headstrong, her relief when he o'clock Wednesday—and it's going to be good to get home." For a little while Ada Lewis sat with the letter in her hand, the warm June sunlight streaming upon her graying hair and delicate yet firm three hundred more at Franklin. I've promised to go there." She pressed her hands together till the one gold ring cut into her flesh. "You would let a few hundred dollars keep you from accepting your father's old pulpit. And you know how I love Dorton!"

It had been hard, too, to stretch her scanty income that Joseph might be well clothed and might indulge in the many innocent but expensive pleasures enjoyed by his wealthier classmates. "Joseph must never have to economize, even if I do," decided Joseph's mother, as she increased his allowance, leaving Dorton for a smaller town where she was unknown and might possibly all her petty economies unobserved by her former friends.

But her heart remained hungry for Dorton. She longed to return there with her boy in the fall, to live, perhaps, in the very house where her young husband had taken her as a bride. She saw herself mingling with the older members of the congregation, entertaining simply but charmingly, and dressing as daintily as she had done before Joseph's necessities had made her hateful economies imperative. Her eyes sparkled like a young girl's as she raised them again to the picture above the fireplace, and her lips curved softly with happiness as she folded Joseph's boyish scrawl.

She did not trust herself to meet him at the train. Her absence from the station sometimes puzzled her son; he never dreamed that his perfectly poised mother was always so shaken at seeing him after a year's separation that she could not bear to greet him before strangers. Today, as she opened the door for him, and he hugged her with his impetuous roughness, he was too excited to notice how she trembled in his arms and clung to him with almost hysterical eagerness.

"How's everything? You're looking fine, mother. And here's Mary!" He kissed that beaming hand-maid heartily. "Now, tell Father Rogan that you let a wicked young rabbi kiss you! Yes, you can put my suitcase in my room right away." All the way upstairs he chattered unceasingly like a girl home from her first dance. His mother sat upon the bed as he pulled a few articles from his suitcase, changed his collar for dinner, spread out his latest neckties for her inspection. Her cheeks were almost as flushed as his; her eyes sparkled as vivaciously.

Sophia A. Levinson, who is a recent graduate of the Cincinnati Eclectic Medical College and who has returned to New York city, where she has been a resident for many years, is about to enter the Cumberland Street Hospital as an interne. She graduated from the Eclectic Medical College with honors and will take up the practice of medicine in New York city as soon as she is finished with her internship at the Cumberland Street Hospital. Prior to her entrance into the studies of medicine, she was a worker in the Derech Emonoh Talmud Torah, which prospered under her directorship and which organization is at a very flourishing state at the present time.

Dr. Levinson expects to resume her connection with the Talmud Torah at the conclusion of her internship at the Cumberland Street Hospital and to continue her social work.

"Mother, how young you look!" he broke off suddenly in the midst of his hair brushing. "A new dress, isn't it? And you said you had nothing to wear if you came to my graduation!" She did not think it necessary to tell him that the simple gray crepe she had put on for his homecoming was a dress she and the deft-handed Mary had made over for the second time; that it was worn on state occasions, carefully hoarded until she could afford a less antiquated dinner gown. She only flushed a little at his compliment and told him to stop teasing a gray-headed old woman with a grown-up son.

All through the dinner Joseph rattled on in his merry, thoughtless way; but, for some reason she could hardly define, Mrs. Lewis began to feel vaguely uneasy. He always came home as light-hearted as a child, but now his laughter struck her as a little nervous, his mirth a trifle forced. She remembered how as a little fellow he had always seemed the most care-free when meditating how to confess some schoolboy scrape. She stole an anxious glance at him across the silver and cut glass placed upon the table in his honor.

He would not speak of his plans until dinner was over. Mrs. Lewis lingered in the dining room long enough to hear Mary's chuckling. "And he took two balloons," she said before she followed him into the library. The late twilight had deepened, and she was about to switch on the lamp, when he spoke from his place on the sofa: "Mother, come over here, and we'll talk in the dusk—it's more comfortable and home-like."

He drew her down beside him on the long sofa. In the uncertain light she glanced from her son's glowing face to her husband's portrait. The resemblance between them struck her as it had never done before. For a moment it seemed that her young husband sat beside her in the long twilight at Dorton; she shivered a little, then calmed herself to listen to Joseph's faltering voice.

"Mother, I know you'll be a little disappointed, but I'm not going to Dorton. I refused their offer last week, but I thought I'd tell you about it when I got home—I always hate writing letters."

Her hands, ringless save for the one gold band, clasped themselves tightly in her lap. Her voice was quiet: "Last year you hoped to receive an offer from Dorton."

"I knew you had some good friends there." She realized bitterly that her fear of seeming sentimental even to her own son had kept her from confessing what a return to Dorton would mean to her. "And—and there are other reasons why I must earn as much as I can my first year."

A wave of warmth seemed to envelop her heart. He was thinking of her after all! "We could live comfortably on my little income and whatever they will pay you in Dorton," she assured him eagerly. "And I'd be willing to be economical just to live there again."

"But—oh, why do you have to make it so hard to tell you," he burst out, petulantly. "I want to get a decent salary this year and save all I can, because I'm going to be married next June."

Absurdly enough, Ada Lewis' first thought was that it was good that she had not switched on the light; it was too dark now for Joe to see her face, and her battle would be easier. She was silent, groping for words.

He moved impatiently. "Why don't you say something? Aren't you glad? Aren't you surprised?"

"Yes, I am—surprised. Why didn't you tell me about her?"

He laughed awkwardly. "You know I'm no good at letter writing. And it all happened before I knew it, any how. Last mid-year vacation I ran up to Mortonville with her brother—he's in my class—a fine kid. Didn't I show you Abe Daniel's picture once?"

She nodded dumbly. "Well, it started then. I know you'll just love her, mother. She's only nineteen—wait a minute," he fumbled for his watch, "and I'll show you how pretty she is."

"It's too dark; after a while. When did you become engaged?"

"Oh, nothing formal; but we've been writing all winter, and then she came up for Abe's graduation, and that settled it. You know how things are—how they went with you and father."

"And her parents—"

"Oh, I ran up to see them over Sunday, and it's all right. Mortonville's right near Franklin, you know, and I fixed up my next year's job at the same time. That's why I'm so dead anxious to get there next year, as well as the difference in salary, for I'll be only a three hours' ride from Janet. But if I were way down in Dorton—mother," suddenly, "since you're so anxious to go there, maybe you could live in Dorton after we're married. You wouldn't care to live with us, would you? I know you said once that you liked father's people, but thought it was much better for young folks to be by themselves like you and dad. Only you have to come and pay Janet and me long visits. You'll just love her; everybody does. And she's going to make a first-class rabbi out of me. I know I wouldn't have worked so hard to be valedictorian if it hadn't been for her." He started up suddenly. "The dickens. I've forgotten the last train goes at ten. Well, if I hurry I can write the girl a few words and get it off in time. She's not like you, mother, satisfied with a letter every week. Why, she'd worry herself sick if she didn't hear from me every day, and a 'special' on Sundays."

He swung from the room. For a moment she lay back, quivering and helpless. Then with a supreme effort at self-control she rose and followed Joseph up to his room. She did not dare, however, to look at her husband's picture which hung above the fireplace. She tapped softly on her son's door. "Come in," he called absently.

He was hunched over the writing desk, literally clutching his curly hair as the right phrases refused to come. "Yes?" he interrogated, but she knew that his thoughts were miles away. "I haven't congratulated you, Joseph," she answered quietly. She bent down and kissed him. "Tomorrow I will write to—Janet, if you want me to."

"Of course I do. And you'll love her a lot," he repeated. "You'll say I had as good taste as father," he laughed, and went back to his letter.

She tried to smile; but when she came to her own room her lips were one thin red line and her shoulders sagged wearily beneath the made-over crepe dinner gown. On the walls hung picture after picture of Joseph, Joseph as a round-headed baby, Joseph clutching his grammar-school diploma, Joseph in his first long trousers. Tonight she did not look at them. She walked a little unsteadily to the dresser, where beside Joseph's latest photograph stood a picture of her husband in a plain white frame. She remembered dully that she had bought it when they were duly and formally engaged, and she did not have to be ashamed to let her mother see the picture upon her dresser. She remembered, too, that her lover had been an only son. Now she picked up the picture and stood holding it at arm's length. The face was the face of a young man, singularly like the boy in the next room. But she who looked upon it with blurred eyes had the look of an old woman.

Chief Rabbi to Make Interesting Welsh Tour—Professor Friedlander's New Jewish Book Welcomed—George Bernard Shaw Counters Literary Anti-Semite's Views—Some Typical Shavian Brilliances—Dr. Gollancz Enunciates Studied Views of Shakespeare's Shylock—Tribute to the Great Jewish Shakespearean Scholar by Albert Jessel.

London, May 26, 1916.

The Chief Rabbi is starting on a West of England and Welsh pastoral tour. He will be at Bristol from whence, in 1497, sailed John Cabot the first Englishman to set foot on the mainland of America) on the coming Sabbath, and then go round a half-dozen important Welsh cities, coming back to London in time to preach the Hospital Saturday sermon on June 24th.

Professor Israel Friedlander has had his book, "The Jews of Russia and Poland: a Bird's-eye View of Their History and Culture," now also issued in England through the London branch of Putnam's. The book is being well received here, and scholars are glad to hear that the professor is at work on an English translation of S. M. Dubnow's elaborate "History of the Jews in Poland and Russia." Friedlander's own book reads here as popular, and not especially written for scholars, and it is all the more welcome. According to the general tone of the reviews of the book here it is held that Professor Friedlander has, in the tolerant tone of his treatment, as in the subject of his theme, served greatly the interests of international comity and a wise pacifism.

George Bernard Shaw, as readers of this journal well know, is one of the most interesting and, at times, perplexing figures in current British literary life and polemics. Since he first dawned upon London as a raw young man from Dublin, Ireland, in the later '80's, he has gradually built up for himself a reputation compounded of jester and wise man, with, as time has gone on, an increasing public appreciation of the predominance of the wise man in him. He is now a man of sixty, but has lost nothing of his vigor of view.

During the past week we have had an opportunity of getting his opinion on the universal Jewish question. This comes out in a review of a new book by Julius West, entitled "G. K. Chesterton: a Critical Study." After critically subjecting both the book and Chesterton to close study, he turns to Chesterton's position on the Jewish question, Gilbert Keith Chesterton, as is well known, being a good deal of an Anti-Semite. Plunging right into the subject, Shaw speaks as follows:

"Then, as to the Jews, we cannot massacre the Jews without carting them all to Russia, which is hardly feasible. We must put up with the Jews, just as we must put up with the Irish, in spite of the alarming consequences of allowing young men to be imported from Dublin to London, as Lord Northcliffe was, and as I was. Considering that it is with the greatest difficulty that Englishmen can be induced to put up with one another, it is too much to expect them to love the Jews; but they must let them live, and there's an end on't. Macaulay showed, years before I was born, that the case trumped up by our Jew-baiters could just as easily be trumped up against men with red hair or any other distinctive mark. That demonstration remains unrefuted and, indeed, irrefutable. Now, since Macaulay's time it has become apparent to all the world that the Jews are the only people in Britain who combine culture and intellectual activity and susceptibility with common-sense and practical business ability. When you speak of the selfish, greedy, pushing plutocrat who makes money and spends it in getting a great deal more of what a navy likes, you are never thinking of a Jew. And when you speak of the unpractical dreamer, full of books and pictures and noble ideals, but hopeless when it comes to business and convinced that politics and economics and mathematics are the dry pursuits of soulless and sexless men and women, you are again not thinking of a Jew."

Shaw goes on to pierce some more of the futilities of Chesterton, and in his own inimitable Shavian ways, says: "If all the portfolios of the Cabinet were strictly reserved for Jews, and the proceedings of the House of Commons conducted in Yiddish, we have every reason to expect that the country would be governed much more intelligently than it is at present, and with a steady regard to the value of intellectual training, knowledge of languages and literature and artistic culture, instead of our present implacable and boorish contempt for them."

These hard facts—for such they are, to our shame—will not yield to jibes at "the Infant Samuel" and implications that no Christian would have behaved as the Lord Chief Justice did about his Marconi shares. If the German Junkers were to drop their silly and snobbish prejudice against the Jews, and to admit them to their imperial councils, as our Junkers have done, I should be seriously alarmed; for our tolerance of the Jews is one of the advantages we have over Germany in the war."

Shakespeare's Shylock is one of those questions which are always up for discussion. Ever since the dramatist wrote the "Merchant of Venice," Shylock has been a persona grata with the professional and amateur debaters. Perhaps one of the finest studies of this dramatic character was contained in the address delivered by Professor Dr. Israel Gollancz, himself a Shakespearean scholar of wide and undeniable attainments. Dr. Gollancz was speaking before the Jewish Historical Society in London, and he first of all set out to show how Shakespeare derived his character of Shylock. He knew the moral form of the Elizabethan drama, which was for the most part allegorical, and was a dramatization of scriptural texts that he beheld when a lad, and in his youth he had seen a play performed dealing with the mind of usurers. Dr. Gollancz, however, was inclined to think that the play was very near, indeed, to the allegorical moral drama, which gave the conviction that the characters were meant to represent certain people of the period, and from the impression conveyed to Shakespeare's mind, he wrote "The Merchant of Venice," which represented a play dealing with the problem of usury, and though in the Elizabethan reign we have a series of pamphlets which deal with it, such problem had nothing to do with the Jews, but was a problem of the Church.

Dr. Gollancz contended that at the back of Shakespeare's story was prejudice and hatred in regard to the Jews of the time. About that period Christopher Marlowe had already written "The Jew of Malta," which was a theme of lust for wealth and not for usury, and the story of which dealt rather with the politics of the time. During Marlowe's lifetime Shakespeare was in the background; but upon the former's death he came forward as his rival and looked round for a theme. His quest was in Italy, where the story of the Venetian Jew had already been localized. The lecturer pointed out how Shakespeare, who was careful in the choice of names, got the name of Shylock. The most famous book of that time had been written about the Jews, and in it was a statement that when the Jews were besieged by the Roman general Antonio they sent three of their number to interview him. One of them was named Shiloch. Shakespeare was interested in the word, and appropriated it as a good name for a Jew. The Hebrew for "money cormorant" (which in the Elizabethan age was the term applied to a usurer) was Shalock, and Shakespeare blended these two names, and got the name of Shylock.

Dr. Gollancz further contended that at the back of the story there was a prejudice and hatred of the Jews of his time. Shakespeare's theme of the play was to create all the horror likely to satisfy the audience, fed as they were on the legends of the monstrosity of the Jew. His object in creating Shylock was to temper the prejudices against them. Shylock belonged to the play as being repellent, yet, though he was anxious to claim his right, in ordinary conditions he would have yielded to the plea for mercy if his daughter Jessica had not eloped. Shakespeare's great power was the idea not to abandon his purpose, which he might have done before he created Jessica, who became the instrument for determining the bad side of Shylock's character through her desertion. The plea of mercy would have been too wrong. Shakespeare felt that, and yet could not be diverted from his purpose. The play had started as a mere drama of usury, but Shakespeare thought out the problem, and the play was his view of the whole subject. The lesson of the play, as Shakespeare saw it, was what man had made of man. We know "The Merchant of Venice" was a monstrous legend, and that no Jew existed of the type of Shylock. Dr. Gollancz deducted from excerpts that it was from the lips of Lorenzo the lesson of the play was enunciated. Shakespeare emphasized Jessica as the motive for Shylock's revenge; otherwise, if this episode had not taken place, the character of Shylock might have been quite different.

Albert H. Jessel, K. C., in proposing a vote of thanks to the lecturer, said that he thought he had known his Shakespeare well, but after listening to such an interesting lecture and to the various themes put forward by Dr. Gollancz, he found that he had much yet to learn in that direction. In all his experiences among the Jews he had never come across one of the type of Shylock. If he were asked who was one of the greatest men in Anglo-Jewry he would be inclined to say it was Dr. Gollancz.

A special service was held on May 21 at the Bayswater Synagogue to commemorate the jubilee of the Bayswater Jewish School. The school, which began with twenty-five scholars in the upper part of a house in Gibson place, now educates 300 children.

Anti-Jewish Propaganda Growing in Russia.

The following appeal appeared in the Russkoye Znamya of Petrograd, under date of March 23, 1916. This is one of numerous articles which are now appearing regularly in the anti-Semitic press of Russia. From private sources, the American Jewish Committee has learned that the propaganda to discredit the Jews of Russia has reached extraordinary dimensions and is being both indirectly and officially encouraged by various departments of the Russian Government:

CHRISTIANS, WATCH YOUR CHILDREN!

An idea of the manner in which the persecution of the Jews is now conducted by the anti-Semitic press of Russia is afforded by an appeal published on March 23 in No. 56 in the Russkoye Znamya, one of its leading journals. It reads:

"Christians, Watch your Children! The Jewish Passover is approaching. The days are now coming, when the misanthropic Jewish religion requires the pure blood of a child, the blood of an innocent Christian child.

"The accursed Jews are seeking with all their might to convince the civilized world of the contrary, though in vain, that they do not commit ritual murders, that they do not use Christian blood for religious purposes, that such a charge is only an invention and slander on the part of those who hate and despise them. This is what the accursed Jews say. But it is not true. Everybody knows that in all parts of the world, every year shortly before their Passover, they cruelly torture children of different creeds, draw their blood and murder them.

"This is a fact not only confirmed in many pages of the ancient history of the accursed Jews, but also in modern history, and by the experience all nations that have had the misfortune to extend hospitality to those of the Jewish race. Although the ritual murders are performed with the greatest precaution and secrecy, yet the continuous repetition of the crime in the course of many centuries has led to the discovery that this most shameful of all Jewish deeds constitutes an established institution. The use of human blood by the Jews for religious purposes is proved by numerous and indisputable facts in ancient and modern times.

"It is proven by serious scientific studies that ritual murders by the Jews are not myths, not fairy tales, not legends of the Middle Ages, but a shameful, bloody reality. No matter how indignant the Jews may be, how much they may cry out, how much noise they may make about it, and however much they may attempt to wipe out the stain of blood which puts to shame the Jewish race, they will never succeed!

"They will never succeed to wash away the pure, innocent blood of children, which stains their wicked Jewish souls!

"Therefore, Christians, watch your children, for the accursed Jewish Passover is approaching!

"P. S.—It is advisable that all Russian newspapers notify their readers of the approach of Passover. Thereby numerous disappearances of Christian children will be prevented."

Immigrants' Information Bureau.

The information bureau of the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society of America, according to the annual report of its president, Judge Leon Sanders, handled during the year more than 23,000 cases. All of this work is of incalculable importance to immigrants, saving them from loss of time, money and vexation of spirit.

More than 2,000 immigrants were notified of change of addresses of relatives or friends, or given information tending to correct the advice given them by well-meaning but ill-informed persons, which information facilitated their landing.

The information bureau answered more than 4,000 inquiries regarding detained immigrants, and advised the proper course of action to secure their release.

Frequently persons in Europe intending to embark for the United States seek the advice of the society as to whether or not they should come. One thousand five hundred such persons were advised through the information bureau. Many were discouraged from coming, and saved from the hardships of deportation.

The information bureau serves not only as a meeting ground of the immigrant-to-be and those already settled in America, but it is of invaluable assistance to those who are long resident in the United States. It helps hundreds of immigrants every month who need verification of their landing in order to secure citizenship papers, the admission of their children to school, working papers, membership in unions, etc.

Many organizations throughout the country secure from the information bureau valuable data regarding the time of arrival of immigrants in the United States, and the information given by them at such time. This service is very useful to these organizations in determining their dealings with the various cases presented to them.

The branches of the society at Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, San Francisco and Seattle also maintain information bureaus.

SEVEN RABBIS GRADUATED.

The annual graduating exercises of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America were held last Sunday afternoon in Aeolian Hall, when diplomas were awarded to seven graduates.

The exercises began with an invocation by Rabbi Herman Abramowitz, of Montreal, Canada. Cantor Jacobson chanted an El Mole Rachamin, and Dr. Cyrus Adler, the acting president, then conferred the degree of Rabbi upon the following: Louis Feinberg, B.A., University of Pennsylvania; Herman Lissauer B.A., College of the City of New York; Joseph Margolies, B.A., New York University; Jacob Mendelsohn, B.A., New York University; Samuel Sachs, B.A., Columbia University; Joseph Sarachek, B.A., Columbia University; Morris Teller, B.A., University of Pennsylvania.

In his address to the graduates Dr. Adler said:

"Even upon an occasion like the annual commencement of the seminary it is impossible to keep entirely in the background the gloomy conditions of the world at large and the sadness in our own household. The terrible calamity of war which has involved all of the continents and the isles of the sea, has brought unparalleled suffering to the whole house of Israel. To us has been added the personal grief at the loss of that great and good man who was the head of this seminary. Here in this building, and in many cities in this land and across the ocean, meetings took place to celebrate his memory, which will be held in reverence and affection by his friends, his colleagues, his disciples, and by many thousands who chanced to stand in his distinguished presence or had the wisdom to profit by his splendid contributions to science and to literature.

"The directors, upon whom the very heavy responsibility was laid of finding a man to take up this work, considered it neither prudent nor wise to endeavor to reach an immediate conclusion and they asked me temporarily to give an oversight to the conduct of the seminary. With the full realization of my own unworthiness, I agreed to do this, because I felt, with my colleagues of the board of directors, that mature reflection for the filling of so important an office was required, and also because of the affection that I entertained for this institution and my realization of its profound significance for the maintenance of Judaism upon the American continent.

"When the Seminary Association which preceded the present corporation was created in 1888, its founders declared that the necessity had been made manifest for associated and organized effort on the part of the Jews of America faithful to Mosaic law and ancestral conditions, for the purpose of keeping alive the true Judaic spirit; in particular by the establishment of a seminary where the Bible shall be impartially taught and rabbinical literature faithfully expounded, and more especially where youths desirous of entering the ministry may be thoroughly grounded in Jewish knowledge and inspired by the precept and example of their instructors with the love for the Hebrew language and the spirit of fidelity and devotion to the Jewish law." The objects of the association were described in the Constitution as being "the preservation in America of the knowledge and practice of historical Judaism as ordained in the law of Moses and expounded by the prophets and sages of Israel in Biblical and rabbinical writings."

"Upon the consolidation of this association with the present corporation, these purposes were reaffirmed in the act of merger, and included in the enlarged statement of objects described in the act of 1902 as being 'the perpetuation of the tenets of Jewish religion; the cultivation of Hebrew literature; the pursuit of Biblical and archaeological research; the advancement of Jewish scholarship; the establishment of a library, and for the education and training of Jewish rabbis and teachers.'

"From the beginning to the present day these objects have been faithfully pursued, and they have resulted in the training of one hundred rabbis, honorably filling positions in the United States, Great Britain and in Canada; in the establishment of the greatest Jewish library in America, ranking among the three or four most important Hebrew libraries in the world; in the organization of an institute for the training of teachers, though but a few years old, yet already having served some hundreds of students—in fine, creating a force which forever assures the maintenance of a Judaism in America, which, bound to the wisdom, traditions and the piety of the past, has its face set resolutely and hopefully to the future, in a land which, as far as one can now see, is destined to hold the largest Jewish population of any country on earth.

"The need that such an institution should arise was indeed very great. Too long was it postponed, in the hope that differences which had arisen could be composed, and too long was it allowed feebly to struggle, ignored by the great mass of the Jewish people. And even yet the importance and significance of this seminary has not been grasped by the Jews of America. I hold no one to blame for this failure, because the Jews of America have had very many serious things to do in the last thirty or forty years. Some things upon which they have expended much energy and time they might have left undone as being either useless or harmful. But the principal significance of this seminary is that not only the dignity, but the very safety of the large Jewish population we now possess rests upon having leaders who, to use a curious word in such connection, are experts especially called for the work of the guidance of our congregations, trained and drilled and fitted and polished so that they may not present rawness or uncouthness either to the congregations or to the community at large. It is this need that makes it the business of all the people to look to the seminary for the training of their leaders, to exhibit an actual interest in the welfare of the seminary itself. The obligations between an institution of learning and the public that it serves are reciprocal, and we have a right to expect something more than the mere 'voice' of the people.

"To the young men who are entering the rabbinate today I should like to recall the words of a distinguished friend and former associate, the great classical scholar of Johns Hopkins University, Professor Basil L. Gildersleeve, now eighty-five years of age, and still actively engaged in research work, who addressed a class of graduates upon one occasion in a style somewhat different from the usual commencement oration. 'So far from telling you,' he said, 'that you know nothing of the burden and heat of the day, I can honestly say that the mechanical drudgery of the school task and the Tophetic glow of the examination room are the worst things that civilized man has to go through. To be sure, modern theorists tell us that learning ought to be made delightful; that we ought to absorb it unconsciously; that the teacher who does not make his teachings interesting is a failure, and so on. My young friends, my old friends, teaching is a surgical process. You may administer an anesthetic, an anodyne. You may perform your sleight-of-hand trick while your patient is under the influence of laughing-gas, but the healthy human being feels the after-effects, and no matter whom the pupil had studied under—momentous proposition—he has had to endure, and that this is all over I congratulate you most heartily. You will find people enough to sneer at the college-bred man. It is a sneer begot of envy. Remember that, and take comfort. You will find people mean enough to ask you, as I was asked when I took my Ph.D. degree and had attained a height from which I have been steadily declining ever since: 'What are you going to be?' As if a Ph.D. degree were not an answer to all that. Never mind, major and minor, principal and subordinate, can never vex you more, for you are free of the guild, and you have gained your freedom by that submission to law wherein alone true freedom resides. Heaven forbid that I should mar your just pleasure by telling you of all the lions in the path. The lions whose mouths you have already effectually stopped are among the grimmest you will ever have to encounter, and the zeal and earnestness and patience with which you have undergone the heroic tests set before you are sufficient proofs that you do not need the sermonizing that men in my position think themselves qualified to inflict on those who have taken the first great step forward to active life. It would rather become us oldsters to ask ourselves whether we should have done as well in your case, and to show that, despite all our own failures—most of which the Great Examiner hides until we graduate from this world, and even beyond—to show, I say, that, despite all our own failures, we have sweetness of temper enough left to rejoice with them that do rejoice—ay, and justly rejoice.'

"It is vital to the Jewish cause that the rabbi keeps the essentials clearly in mind and is not moved by passion or the clamor of the day. His glance should be upward and his ear directed to heaven—not to the ground. His lessons must be simple and direct and without confusion. It is true that there can be no Judaism without Jews; but better that the Jews perish than exist without Judaism. There is no middle ground or compromise on this point for the rabbi or the religious teacher, and no amount of sophistry or oratory, rabbinical or otherwise, can becloud the issue. The Romans might allow themselves a double-faced god; the Jews will not tolerate a religious leadership which has the capacity or the desire to face both ways. You cannot expect to lead the young men of your congregations along the paths of true Judaism and at the same time hold before their eyes a Jewish leadership which is either anti-religious or non-religious. That such a leadership should find place in the Holy Land itself would be an everlasting scandal to Jewry. When the rabbis who go forth from this seminary and from like institutions shall have made these matters clear to the people, it will not be needful for another Elijah to arise and point out who are the real troublemakers of Israel.

"During the year 1892 there was delivered in this seminary a course of lectures, entitled 'The Activities of the Rabbi,' and the subjects treated were the relationship of the rabbi to the school, to the young people, to the communal institutions, to public movements, to the congregation and to the individual. Although printed nearly a quarter of a century ago, you will find, if you examine this little volume of lectures, that it contains suggestions which would not be considered antiquated even in this age of rapid development. In all the relations to your congregation and to the public which you are called upon to fill, remember that there must be no self-seeking, but entire unselfishness. You must enter sympathetically into the life, the traditions and the history of those to whom you minister, and it is only by merging your identity with the congregation that you can teach the individual members of the congregation to merge."

Dr. Blau to Preach During Entire Summer.

Rabbi Joel Blau, of the Congregation B'nai Jeshurun, will not take a vacation during the ensuing summer, and will deliver a sermon every Sabbath morning. The congregation is now holding services at Leslie Hall, Broadway and Eighty-third street.

Jewish Deputation Received by Russian Premier.

From cable advices which reached this country in March, it was learned that a Jewish deputation, headed by Baron Ginsburg, chairman of the Central Jewish Committee of Petrograd, presented to the new Russian Premier and Minister of Interior Sturmer a memorial on the conditions of Jews in Russia. The text of the memorial, which has now been received, is as follows:

Having devoted itself for fourteen months with relief activity in behalf of Jewish war sufferers, the Central Jewish Committee has had the opportunity of ascertaining the true condition of the Jews in various sections of the country. This condition is an extremely lamentable one.

Most of the Jewish suffering and affliction is a result of the systematic anti-Jewish agitation which is being carried on in certain civil and military circles and from the fearful anti-Jewish attitude on the part of the military authorities.

The Central Jewish Committee registered until November of last year no less than 150,000 names of homeless Jews, who had been driven away from their domiciles and deprived of their possessions, for no other reason than they were Jews.

An overwhelming amount of material giving evidence of Jewish suffering has found its way into the offices of the committee and definitely illustrates that these persecutions are the result of anti-Jewish hatred. This material has been gathered by committees in 348 cities and towns, and contain only such facts as have been verified by documentary proof. It has been ascertained, for instance, that when the notorious traitor, Miasoredow, was apprehended, it was a Jew of his acquaintance—Se'ir La'azozel—who was sought by the authorities. We possess copies of the prosecuting material in the trial of a number of Jews who were sentenced to death in connection with the Miasoredow affair. A day before the hearing the prisoners were allowed by the prosecution to write home that they would surely be given freedom. It was obvious, therefore, that there was little proof against them. The next day, however, they were sentenced to death.

We have copies of several proclamations signed by the highest military authorities at the front and which were distributed throughout the army. We have endeavored to trace a concrete fact which should warrant the accusations against Jews contained in these proclamations, but have not found it.

Another document tells of a command issued by Colonel P. to the local officer in the town of L. As German spies were reported to be in L., the Colonel ordered that these spies must be discovered, and that they must naturally be found among the Jews. It was then to be expected that the local officer, in his desire to distinguish himself, discovered eight Jews, who were, without trial, shot as spies.

We have a number of official military newspapers, the columns of which are full of venom against the Jews, in the charges against whom there is no foundation.

After citing further facts, the Memorial finally adds:

From the above accounts, it is perfectly obvious that persecutions of the Jews are not a number of individual episodes caused by accident, but are the result of a well-organized Jew-baiting movement, to which thousands of Jews have already been sacrificed and which has brought with it the ruin of hundreds of thousands of families.

Sabbath—Eight P. M.

The Ecclesiastical Authorities have taken the only practicable line in connection with the Daylight Saving Bill, and have arranged that Sabbath should both begin and end an hour later. Next Friday, for the first time in the history of our community, the Sabbath therefore begins at 8 p. m. We have so long been accustomed to 7 o'clock as the furthest limit of lateness, that the new hour seems almost a violent break with the past. But it has some merit. Even the least observant and the most industrious of Jews should have knocked off work by eight, and thus what the Sabbath loses in its hold on the home—young children cannot be kept up late, for instance, on Friday evenings—it gains in the enforced respect of the hitherto less scrupulous members of the community. At the same time, the Sabbath will, in the summer time, terminate as late as at twenty past ten, and though this may affect the Jewish shopkeeper and put an end, for many to Saturday night—well—"social intercourse"—it practically makes the Sabbath a day and night observance. On the second night of Pentecost we may even see the almost uncanny spectacle of the synagogue service beginning at ten minutes past ten in London and after eleven o'clock in Glasgow. However, none of these little difficulties are matters of any real moment, and we have no doubt that Jews will soon settle down into the new conditions as comfortably as other members of the population. Since sunshine is a life-giver, they should welcome the innovation even more than most peoples, for what aggregation of men need more to catch its healing rays and be comforted by them?—London (Eng.) Jewish Chronicle.

In order to insure the insertion of communications in the current issue of THE HEBREW STANDARD they must be in this office not later than Wednesday 10 a. m. of the week in which they are to appear.

At the Chicago national convention last week a speaker made the interesting statement that peace would probably come early in the next administration of our government. Assuming that this prophecy is correct, that will afford ample time for the Jewish Congress to be convened, deliberate and, as we hope, secure a measure of success for its work.

We congratulate Jacob H. Schiff upon having received the honorary degree of Doctor of Commercial Science from New York University. To be a doctor implies that the person possessing such a title is a master of the branch of knowledge covered thereby. Mr. Schiff certainly knows and fully understands the science of commerce, in which domain his most outstanding successes have been achieved.

Elkan N. Adler, of London, must probably realize by this time that it is a trifle venturesome for a Jewish communal worker, even under the extraordinary circumstances now prevailing in England because of the war, publicly to express his gratitude to the Czar's Government for individual courtesies extended. This statement of the facts of the matter serves to show the inconsequential nature of Mr. Adler's action in the premises. We may well leave it there.

The exponent of "American" Judaism tells us that the Hebrew Union College is to the rabbinate what the Union Theological Seminary of this city is to the Presbyterian ministry. The comparison is an apt one. Many of the graduates and students of Union Seminary are suspected by the clergy of their denomination of holding heterodox views. So, many of the alumni and students of the Hebrew Union College are held to be "off color" from the point of view of the Jewish religion by its faithful adherents.

By the testimony of Jewish Charities the recent Indianapolis meeting of the National Conference of Jewish Charities accomplished two important and concrete pieces of constructive work. It established a field bureau, a measure of supreme usefulness for organized charitable endeavor, and it adopted a new set of rules to control the transient problems arising between different cities in the association. Hence, this biennial session was not altogether taken up by "discussion," which may be somewhat ungraciously but none the less truthfully translated by the words, "talk, talk."

The Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society of America has abundant reason to indulge a justifiable pride in what it has accomplished for the suffering Jews in the Eastern war zones. Through its intermediation these people have been enabled to communicate with their relatives in this country, thus rendering it possible for effective private relief to be extended to them. In this way it is probable that much of the general and indescribable misery produced by the war will be alleviated. The Hebrew Sheltering Society deserves the thanks of world-Jewry for its important intervention in this particular.

We are surprised to come across the editorial statement in the columns of one of our esteemed contemporaries recently that "The basic cause of the oppression and persecution of the Jews of Russia is religious." We repeat, we were surprised, for at this late day we thought it generally was tolerably well understood that Russian hatred of the Jews depended upon racial and economic premises for its existence. Religion has, except in a very attenuated official degree, nothing to do with the situation. It should not be forgotten that much of the Russian persecution of the Jew is forced on the masses of the population by their bureaucratic leaders, and to them religious differences are, indeed, matters of very small consequence, even of total unconcern. The mujik dwells in peace and contentment by the side of the Jew until he is made frantic and diabolical by pressure from without and above. If the religious difference were so compelling, the mujik could never abide the Jew even for an instant of time. On the whole, then, it requires no argument to explain the true bases of Russian anti-Semitism, however much we must condemn it.

MR. JUSTICE BRANDEIS

ACTING in accordance with the time-honored maxim, "All's well that ends well," we shall refrain from commenting on the vituperative campaign waged by his enemies and opponents against Mr. Brandeis since his nomination by President Wilson for the Supreme Court, nor on the tactics of those of the Senate inimical to him which delayed his confirmation for his exalted office for upwards of four months. He has been triumphantly confirmed and takes his seat on the bench with the unqualified approbation of the vast majority of his fellow-citizens. He will, we are persuaded, adorn the great court which he joins and bring to its work qualities and an ability of a brilliant order of usefulness.

In this place it may be appropriate for us to point out what implications this appointment of the first Jew to sit in the highest judicial tribunal of the land has. For one thing it signifies that prejudice of the blind and unreasoning variety is absolutely foreign to the spirit and the genius of our American institutions. A Jew has here the same opportunities for success, for advancement, as any other citizen, not only in law but also in fact. Then, too, Mr. Brandeis' appointment represents a veritable triumph for the democracy, for the plain people, whose cause he espoused and advocated with zeal and persistency. More than these, however, his appointment implies a notification to all the world that the Jew in America is in every respect the equal of the non-Jew, and thus its effect on the position of his co-religionists throughout the world, and especially wherever they are oppressed or persecuted, must be a necessarily notable and salutary one.

We do not indulge in pride or vainglory over Mr. Brandeis' confirmation. We share his great honor with him in the spirit in which we ventured to express our feelings at the time when he was nominated. We may even extenuate some of the abuse that was heaped on his devoted head by his misguided and purblind adversaries in the months that have passed, as tending to purge the atmosphere of our public life of many of the littlenesses with which it abounded.

So, we hail Mr. Justice Brandeis, of the Supreme Court of the United States, and pray for him from Him Who sitteth as the Judge Supreme wisdom, strength and understanding!

Now that Shabuoath has passed, our friends, the Reform rabbis, may settle down to their annual summer sleep. They have given the Holy One, blessed be He, that vacation of which they are so much in need. The only disturbing factor in their somnolence is the "annual picnic," but even that will not mar their sound vacation slumber.

It was but natural that all those in attendance on the commencement exercises of the Jewish Theological Seminary on Sunday involuntarily regretted the absence of him, who was their central figure in years gone by, from these proceedings. Yet, the fact that the graduation took place, that the work of the institution seems to be actively going forward, is proof that Solomon Schechter laid his foundations deep and true.

The Friends, better known as the people commonly called Quakers, assert that not Christianity but the churches of Christendom are responsible for the turmoil in which Europe has found itself ever since the first of August, 1914. The distinction is a fine but a correct one. The dominant religion theoretically makes for peace, but its professors and their churches have tortured this ideal until it is scarcely recognizable.

Reading between the lines of Professor Paul Milukov's statement to The Jewish Chronicle regarding the Jews of Russia, not a very hopeful view of an amelioration of their condition may be taken. M. Milukov is a liberal politician and, consequently, is bound to take an optimistic position vis-a-vis the present events occurring in his country. But if he cannot come forward with any definite program for Russo-Jewish relief, it is apparent that the situation there continues to wear a grave aspect.

Having disposed of one communal controversy our fellow-editors and ourselves find that we are in the throes of another. This time the problem which is presented to us for solution revolves about the query, Can a Reform Jew be a Zionist? It were simple to return the indifferent reply, That depends upon the Reform Jew! And yet, if one reflects, he must come to the inevitable conclusion that truth reposes in the words last penned. Men are swayed in their thoughts and actions by emotion and sentiment, rather than by the processes of formal logic, and if the Reform Jew of our case wishes to proclaim himself a Zionist, we shall be the last to say him nay! This, despite the failure of logical reasoning to support his position.

Georg Brandes, the eminent literary critic, has again devoted his attention to the problem of the situation of the Polish Jews after the war and has given both the Poles and the Jews who reside in their midst very sensible advice. We may hope that this will be sternly heeded. Poland will undoubtedly experience a considerable change as a result of the great struggle now proceeding, and Jews and non-Jews living in the country must seek some rapprochement which will enable them to live together in measurable peace and harmony. Georg Brandes' golden words of wisdom should be taken to heart by all those concerned thereby, but most of all by the non-Jewish Poles. If these will only let the dead past bury its dead, there is hope for a future for Poland which will be all that can be desired by everyone.

NATIONAL SELF-CONFIDENCE

"And Caleb...said: We will surely go up and conquer it, for we are well able to overcome it." (Num. xiii., 30.)

PESSIMISM, a bane in the life of an individual, is, in the life of a nation, downright suicidal. And by this pessimism we do not mean a temporary gloom, such as may settle over any people like a cloud that drags its shadow across a flourishing plain. We mean by it something ingrained, inrooted, inveterate. Nor do we mean by pessimism a dark outlook due to external conditions—a belief that no good awaits the ill-starred people. We mean by it a deliberate adoption of hopelessness in the face of favorable circumstances. It is morbid, ill-natured and cantankerous. It would weep the sun off the sky and blight with its contrary breath the very flowers of the meadow. Its argument is: there is enough good to be had, but we have not the power to obtain it. The fault lies not without, it lies within. The tree is full of fruit, but the branches hang too high for the feeble arm. The well is full of water, but it lies too deep for the down-bent head. And as for asserting that soul-power which might lengthen the reach of arm and head, that is impossible, for power is wanting entirely. So, then, this inbred, organic pessimism means a want of confidence in self. Whatever it may mean in the life of the individual, in the life of a people it amounts to a national crime.

The spies sent out by Moses—with two notable exceptions—were guilty of this crime against the nation. They did not deny the glorious prospects in Palestine, but they denied the power of the people to conquer. Palestine was very good, but Israel was too weak. Therefore did Joshua, and more emphatically Caleb, address themselves mainly to this point in the spies' report, saying: "We will surely go up, and conquer it, for we are well able to overcome it." The answer of these true leaders was a distinct, dominant assertion of the ascendant power of the people. They knew that once you deny that a people has power, you cut off the very tap-root of its existence. Once a people becomes convinced of its own lack of power, it will never develop power. Contrariwise, a people needs but to be told that it has power, in order to call into play all its hidden potentialities, all its latent force.

We might leave it to the novelists to depict the life of those "fortunate youths" who by sheer belief in their own star rose to high station. The theory that belief in success will attract success has its adherents, as well as the somewhat loftier idea that by exercising the powers of our mind, heart and soul we will draw unto ourselves the universal power of destiny. What man would not like to be convinced that by energising his own life he can energise, at will, the life of the world, forcing it into absolute agreement with himself, his purposes and desires? This familiar theory of the popular novelists represents, of course, an exaggerated application of a general truth to the particular life of an individual. But be that as it may, there can be but little doubt that belief in itself, and assiduous concentration of its powers upon the furtherance of its national existence, are bound to lead a nation to ultimate success.

This is because it is as natural for a nation to exercise power as it is for a dynamo to send forth an electric current. A nation is not handicapped by the limitations of the individual life. Rather do individual limitations tend to disappear in the mass; while the feeblest currents of energy tend to be strengthened in the mass. A nation is, as it were, a storage battery of the strength of its individual members. Apart from this advantage of being able to throw off all that is weak and collect all that is strong in its sons, a nation has the further advantage of time. Time is all against the individual, while it is wholly on the side of the nation. The race is immortal. But the chief advantage—as it is the chief function—of the life of the nation is that it makes patent all that in the individual is latent; that it brings to light all that in him is hidden; that, through the group-consciousness, it renders vocal all that in him is dumb.

Force may be latent; but power is always at work. Force may lie idle, but power is always busy; it lifts the hammer, it crushes the stones, it builds the highway, it presses forward. This is the difference between force and power: Force may be the prophecy of Power—sometimes going unfulfilled—but Power is the last fulfilment of Force. And this is the difference between the individual and the nation: we may concede an individual force without allowing that he has power; but we speak of a powerful nation rather than a forceful nation because national life means the efficient application of the national energies to the problems of the national existence. A nation cannot be content with force, it must have power. But the turning of force into power is always a spiritual process. The transition from the former to the latter depends upon the subtle contents of the national mind. Pessimism—loss of belief in the national selfhood—will prevent that transition; while the opposite mood—unbounded belief in its own conquering genius—will push force forward towards power, until the slumbering embers of energy are fully awakened and pressed into mighty activity in behalf of national independence and national glory.

We, modern Jews, are not lacking in force, but we are lacking in power, that is, in national efficiency. An awful pessimism has seized us, until we have become frozen to the very marrow, paralysed in those centres of inner energy which would make for dynamic power. And our greatest misfortune is that we mistake force for power. We beat the air, like the wings of an abandoned windmill that grinds no crust, and persuade ourselves that we are accomplishing something. We rush about and foolishly believe that we are getting somewhere. We are kinetic rather than dynamic. All this because we have lost our belief in self, in our national destiny. Alas, where is the modern Caleb to say to us again: "We will surely go up and conquer, for we are well able!" JOEL BLAU.

PULPIT PLAGIARISM.

Judging from the published pulpit-topics, a certain rabbi of an Uptown "temple" has been preaching rather too frequently the sermons which have, for the last seven years or so, been appearing on this page over the signature of Rabbi Joel Blau. He is by no means the only one who has from time to time helped himself in this handy manner; but he is, to our knowledge, the only one who has been so persistent in this practice, and who, moreover, has been lifting our sermon-titles with such bald literalness as to leave no doubt that he is pursuing the identical method with respect to the subject matter, too. And to cap it, he has with amiable insouciance made use of sermons of rather recent date—not older than one or two years.

from annoyance, we respectfully suggest to the rev. gentleman that in future he should avail himself of the older files of THE HEBREW STANDARD—say, of at least five years back—and leave the recent ones alone. Otherwise, someone with a fair memory, on chancing to hear him, might feel tempted to point out to him the vital difference in Homiletics between "uplifting" and "lifting."

We cannot refrain from congratulating the community on the stimulus given to the New York Section of the Council of Jewish Women. Since the advent of the new regime, with Mrs. William Spurborg as president, a splendid spirit of strength, unity and harmony prevails. Mrs. Spurborg possesses tact, modesty, a full comprehension of the needs of the Section in addition to which she has a rare personality, a quick and responsive sympathy and executive ability which makes working with her a real pleasure. Her insight into the needs of the Section was shown immediately when she selected as the chairman on Religion, Mrs. Joseph Mayor Asher. Mrs. Asher is eminently fitted for this post, as she knows New York Jewry and its needs as few women do, and her judgment as to the work to be undertaken by the New York Section will no doubt prove of inestimable value. We rejoice with the community on the spirit which now permeates the Section, and we congratulate the Section on its excellent choice of its chairman on Religion.

Dr. Friedenwald Resigns From American Jewish Committee.
 Dr. Harry Friedenwald, of Baltimore, who has been a member of the American Jewish Committee since its inception, has resigned, and in doing so has forwarded the following letter:
 Baltimore, Md., June 13, 1916.
 To the American Jewish Committee:
 Gentlemen—It is with regret that I herewith resign my membership in the American Jewish Committee. I have been a member of this committee since its inception; I was present at the meeting at which it was created. It was stated recently by the chairman of the Executive Committee that the American Jewish Committee grew out of a suggestion made by me as the result of a meeting of a number of gentlemen called together at my home after the Kisheneff Pogrom. My interest in the activities of the committee has at all times been great, and I have always been loyal in supporting and serving the committee to the extent of my ability. I regard the work of the committee in the past as very creditable, and it is a source of satisfaction that I was able to take even a small part in this service.

Since the beginning of the war, however, it has become increasingly manifest that the methods of the committee were inadequate, and that the committee was not what it professed to be, a body representative of American Jews, voicing their sentiments and their wishes and carrying out their will. The committee deliberately closed its ears to popular demands and frowned upon the expression of the views of the people; views which did not coincide, it is true, with those of the committee, or more properly speaking, of a few gentlemen who took upon themselves the solution of all our problems and trusted themselves with the sole care of the future of our people. No matter how seriously they may have regarded their work, no matter how great their means to carry out this work in ordinary times, no matter how high their social position, how great their political influence or their financial resources, the people expressed their lack of confidence, and at the same time they voiced their desire to participate in the solution of their own problems. I hoped that the committee would recognize the justice of the popular demand, that they would realize, as I have through intimate contact with the people, that it was a real demand of the people, and not, as they have repeatedly charged, a cry of demagogues; and that they would establish a union of effort and would help bring about harmony of action. I remained a member of the committee, hoping that the occasion might arise when I might be of service in bringing about this harmony. These hopes, I regret, were futile.

The course followed by the committee and its officers has accentuated the division in American Israel. The lines have been drawn sharply between that comfortable class, more or less indifferent to the situation of our brethren in foreign lands, and the great mass of Jewry which feels in every fiber its oneness with its suffering brethren with whom it is bound together by the closest family bonds.

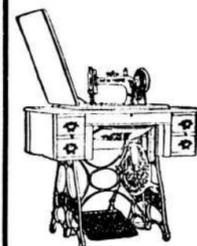

The comfortable class is quite ready to let the American Jewish Committee do as it deems fit, is glad to be rid of annoying responsibility, and is even willing to pay its tax to be relieved of all concern.

The masses cannot assume this attitude of indifference. It is their deep concern! Like an anxious mother at the bedside of her sick child, they are not willing to be silenced and are not satisfied with an indifferent answer that nothing need be done. Something must be done—the best and the wisest counsel must be sought! The American Jewish Committee has forfeited their confidence. It lay in the power of the committee to prevent this schism; the committee could later have healed the breach had it made an earnest effort to understand the people, instead of looking with contempt on "so-called democratic support."

The issue has become clearer and clearer. A class of Jewry is ranged against the overwhelming masses—the unorganized masses which have so long been silent. I see no likelihood that they will become united in the near future. I wish to remove all doubt as to which side has my sympathy. Those of us who feel that their life is part of the throbbing, anxious, suffering Jewish life, belong to that body which is now seeking self-expression in the congress movement. I find no difficulty in making my choice. I am obliged to resign from the American Jewish Committee.

Very truly yours,
 HARRY FRIEDENWALD.

Put it in a stewpan with enough boiling water to cover it, an onion stuck with cloves and a sliced onion, a bunch of herbs, a few peppercorns, and a pinch of salt. Let it simmer gently on the side of the stove for 1 1/4 or 1 1/2 hours, place on a hot dish, remove the strings and skewers and pour a good white sauce over it.

Have a turkey trussed for roasting, stuff the body of the bird with ordinary veal stuffing and the crop with the above chestnut stuffing. Put the white heart of a lettuce in the centre of the dish, the vegetables coated in sauce, round it, and decorate with plain vegetables and shredded white of egg.

Chestnut Vegetables.

Two lbs. chestnuts, 3/4 pint thick brown gravy, 1 tablespoonful finely chopped mushrooms, 1 oz. smoked beef; peel off the hard outside skin of the chestnuts and put the nuts into boiling water for a few minutes; remove the thin inside skin and boil the nuts till tender in salted water about 1/2 an hour, then drain them; cut the smoked beef into tiny dice, cook them and the chopped mushrooms in the thick gravy, toss the chestnuts in this sauce, pile them high in a dish and serve hot.

Walter & Heitzog's Astor Market is conveniently located in the Broadway section near 109th street, and has established a reputation for purveying the best that the market affords at reasonable prices. They retail the highest quality meats, and also specialize in sea food of all description. A call would repay the careful housewife and convince her of the excellence of the Astor Market.

"The Cinderella Man," Oliver Morosco's presentation of Edward Childs Carpenter's delightful and highly successful romantic comedy, continues on the even tenor of its way and is attracting enormous audiences to the Hudson Theatre. The excellence of the cast and altogether charming fairy story is what makes this one of the real successes of the present decade in theatrical productions.

"Moily O," the Harry B. and Robert B. Smith-Carl Woess operetta, considerably improved since the opening at the Cort Theatre, has settled down to what promises to be a summer run. With Tom Lewis, John E. Young, Grace Field, Katherine Galloway, Thomas Conkey, Donald MacDonald and others of artistic worth heading the cast of principles the play will begin the fifth week of its engagement Monday night.

This tribute to David Pinski's drama, "The Treasure," will interest students of the drama. It is from Professor George P. Baker, whose teaching of dramatic writing has been crowned by so many successes among American playwrights; "I have been so deeply interested in 'The Treasure' that I have asked all my courses in technique to read it. It seems to me a very remarkable play, in atmosphere, power of characterization and ability to create and maintain a strange and unaccustomed mood. This work has imagination, strength and great artistic skill." Mr. Pinski writes his plays in Yiddish. Several have been successfully published in German translation, and were shown on the Berlin stage, Reinhardt producing "The Treasure." Bertha Kallisch and Hedwig Reicher have acted in his plays, and it is likely that his genius will find a place on Broadway.

GOOD LUCK RUBBER RINGS
It's poor economy to save a fraction of a cent on a jar ring and have a jar of delicious fruit ferment and be wasted. Cheap rings harden, shrink, crack and let in air. This makes the fruit "work" and spoil. Good Luck rings are thick, strong and elastic, because there is plenty of "live" rubber in them. This makes a tough, resilient cushion between the cap and the jar, so that dust and germs cannot enter.
If your dealer cannot supply you, send 10c for One Dozen Rings
Our booklet, "Good Luck in Preserving," tells why preserves spoil, and how to prevent it. It also contains 33 "distinctly different" preserving recipes, all practical and delicious, and an assortment of gummed and printed jar labels.

Mt. Neboh Congregation to Lay Cornerstone.

Elaborate exercises will be held next Sunday, June 18, at 2:30 p.m., to commemorate the laying of the cornerstone of Mt. Neboh Temple, of Washington Heights, at 150th street, near Broadway. Mr. Adolph Lewinsohn, Hon. Abram I. Elkus and Dr. Lee K. Frankel will participate in the exercises.

The following is the very interesting program for the afternoon: Music by Hebrew Orphan Asylum Band opening Prayer by Rev. Dr. Nathan Stern Cornerstone Ceremony.

Choir Mt. Neboh Congregation Composed by Rev. Dr. Stern and Temple Cantors. Address of Welcome by Rev. Dr. Frankel. Address of Presentation of Silver Trowel by Mr. Edward R. Cohn, President. Mr. David E. Goldfarb, Chairman Cornerstone Committee.

Address of Welcome by Rev. Dr. Frankel. Choir and Chorus of over 50 voices. Address of Presentation of Silver Trowel by Mr. Edward R. Cohn, President. Address of Laying of Cornerstone.

Music by Hebrew Orphan Asylum Band. The committee in charge are: Mr. David E. Goldfarb, chairman; Mr. Louis Cohn, Mr. Edward R. Cohn, Dr. Abraham S. Anspacher, Mr. Max Baumann, Mr. Erich Keible, Mr. Michael Erlanger, Mr. Saul E. Riggs, Mr. Oscar Gans, Mr. Adolph Spiegel and Mr. Falk Zunker.

The building, of Italian medieval architecture, is being constructed on a plot 60 by 100 feet. The structure is believed to be the first of its kind, as it will not only be a house of worship but will stand as a social center for Jewry, both young and old, of Washington Heights. On the roof of this building, which will be the most modern of its kind, will be a fully equipped gymnasium, open air in summer and enclosed in winter. To the 300 children in seventeen classes of Sunday school, instruction in Hebrew, the Bible and ethics is given absolutely free.

Mr. and Mrs. Leopold Zimmerman have each donated a large sum to the religious school of Temple Rodeph Shalom of this city, a part of which is to be used for the encouragement of the study of Hebrew and the balance will be devoted to the establishment of a museum of Jewish antiquities, to be known as "The Mrs. Joseph Zimmerman Museum."

CORRESPONDENCE.

Vacationists May Help the Poor Without Cost.

Editor HEBREW STANDARD.

The exodus from the city to the country for the summer is in progress. All those who are able to do so and who can arrange to absent themselves from the city either permanently or to commute during the heat of the summer months have completed their plans.

Vacationing and commuting mean packing and shipping, and during the progress of this activity all householders have an opportunity to rid themselves of such clothing, furnishings and household articles that they no longer desire to use or can utilize.

Many thousands of people are not blessed with the good fortune to be able to leave the city for rest, recuperation or recreation, and among these many thousands there are at least 3,500 families who must be cared for at all times by charity.

The United Hebrew Charities through its Industrial Department, which is organized for the purpose, will be ready to call for and receive all such articles as the householder finds during the course of packing to be undesirable for further use by the owner. This can all be utilized, and the double purpose of clearing the home of waste and of providing others with the necessities of life can be accomplished through the contribution of all such material and the lives of those who must stay in the city during the heat of the summer made more tolerable.

Write or phone to the Industrial Department. A bag will be sent and the goods called for whenever requested.

Respectfully yours,

WILLIAM HIRSCH,

Industrial Department, United Hebrew Charities, 37-39 Greene street, New York, Telephone No. Spring 1118.

Jewish Conscientious Objectors.

THE HEBREW STANDARD, of New York, takes us to task for the attitude we have adopted as to conscientious objectors who are Jews, and finds it "rather difficult to reconcile" what it calls the "diverse positions," that though a Jew cannot (as we have contended) be a conscientious objector qua Jew yet his being Jew does not prevent his being an objector as citizen. In which case, of course, he is entitled to the fullest consideration prescribed by Parliament for the conscientious objector.

"The vice of this entire argument (declares our contemporary) is that it assumes that pacifism and conscientious objection are no part of the teachings laid down for us by the great Hebrew prophets, for the very practical reason that such teaching, if really widely disseminated, would be calculated to injure the Jews in their position as loyal citizens of the State. It would have been better and certainly more ingenious if the full truth as to pacifism in Holy Writ had been told and coupled thereto, due reference made to the Jew's duty to his modern state. Besides, the Jew has always done his full duty to his country, and nowhere has this, his patriotism, been more amply proved than in the great war now going on, and on every side."

This is all very well, but it occurs to us that our contemporary's argument is itself vicious. Because it fixes pacifism for the Jew and conscientious objection to war service entirely on "the teachings laid down for us by the great Hebrew prophets."

This is clearly one of those lamentably incomplete arguments that are bound to lead to false conclusions. In the first place, the teachings of the great Hebrew prophets were aspirations towards universal peace, which it is at least doubtful would ever be advanced by what is known as pacifism, that bases itself on the doctrine of non-resistance—a very different idea to that of universal peace, and if carried to its logical conclusion would result, as has well been said, in a "peace which passeth all understanding." But why must the Jew be bound only by an interpretation of the great Hebrew prophets which is Christian rather than Jewish, though no one would think so if he judged by some of the foremost Christian nations in modern times? If the Bible is to be invoked, we claim a whole and not a part, and no one will deny that if some sections teach peace others instill the doctrine of warfare in its most ruthless forms. We only need recall the adjurations to our ancestors when gaining Canaan, or the punishment of the monarch because he spared the sheep and the oxen of his enemy. He was told, and by a prophet, too, that "to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams." Perhaps it will be argued that all this was when our people were in an undeveloped state, and that "the great Hebrew prophets," with their teachings of beating swords into ploughshares and spears into pruning-hooks set forth the true Hebrew teaching. But long after they had prophesied occurred the great wars of the Jews, when they defended their nationality against both Greek and Roman, and neither did the bulk of the Jewish people exhibit any conscientious objection to warfare, nor did our great rabbis and teachers preach a doctrine of non-resistance.

The fact is, as we have always contended, there is nothing in Jewish teaching, history or tradition which is inconsistent with the Jew as warrior, and equally nothing inconsistent with his being a pacifist. They leave the Jew utterly independent. So far as they are concerned, they leave the question one entirely for the individual. True, as our contemporary observes, Jews have always done their full duty to the country to which they owed allegiance, and so, if the military service acts had made no provision for the conscientious objector there would have been no specifically Jewish grievance in any Jew being compelled to serve, whatever his opinions. Another proof that the Jew is not conscientious objector qua Jew. But Parliament otherwise decided. And to suggest, as some people do, that no Jew should plead conscientious objection because it is the duty of Jews to be loyal to the country in which they live is absurd upon the face of it. That is really setting up a Jewish disability, because it seeks to prevent a Jew having full advantage of what is the general law of the country. Paradoxically enough, it is in the main Jews who have indulged in this exquisite bit of anti-Semitism. We hope our American contemporary, however, at least will now see that the position we have taken upon the question is not in any sense "diverse," that it is reasonable and, beyond all, Jewish.—London (Eng.) CHEERFULNESS BRINGS ITS REWARD.
BY DR. JULIUS J. PRICE,
Rabbi University Avenue Synagogue, Toronto, Canada.

While a little girl was one day eating her dinner the golden rays of the sun shone upon her spoon. Placing the spoon in her mouth, she exclaimed: "Oh, mamma, I have swallowed a whole spoonful of sunshine!" Would it not be an excellent and praiseworthy thing, doing more good than medicine, if many of us professed Jews would swallow not only one, but many spoonfuls of sunshine? "A merry heart," Solomon wisely said, "doeth good like a medicine." A little true "sunshine in our souls" would not only do us good, but would be the means of imparting good to thousands of others in making them better and happier through our cheerfulness.

If we would remember that others have troubles as well as ourselves it might prove a motive to cheerfulness, and yet not a very high one. Your neighbor may not be burdened with your troubles, but he has his troubles just the same. The rich and poor, the high and the low alike, do not escape them. We have read that the Czar of Russia cannot even trust the members of his own household; that the doors of his study are so made that only two or three persons know how to open them; that the walls of his room are lined with steel, and that there are five or six tables distributed around the room, so that no one will know at a given time in what part of the room the Czar is sitting. He has not your trouble. There may be no need of his worrying about his house rent or grocery bills; but the Czar of all the Russias, the crowned head of 100,000,000 people, is burdened with his troubles, as well as you. If you wait until you have no troubles in order to become cheerful, you will never be cheerful. You are, therefore, advised to bear constantly in mind that everybody has troubles, and cheer up and bear whatever troubles that may fall to your lot bravely and with a submissive and hopeful heart.

But you may not be as badly off in this respect as you think. You may have been making the mistake of magnifying your troubles when you really may be in a much better condition than you suppose. Your troubles may be partly imaginary. We have read of an old gentleman who had the rheumatics so badly that he could not walk a step. All day long he sat helpless in his chair, out under the shade of a tree on his lawn. There, he sat, entirely helpless, looking at the birds and the flowers, when a mad dog, foaming at the mouth, leaped suddenly over the fence and made toward the invalid and his attendants. The attendants, for getting the man, rushed toward the house. The poor helpless invalid, who could not take a step, sprang from his chair and beat his attendants in the homeward race. That story may not be true. But there was a woman who had kept her bed for twenty years who, at an alarm of fire, leaped from it and rushed out into the street. It is said that she was not foolish enough to take to her bed again. This woman was not in as bad condition as she thought she was. Just so, it may be with you. Cheer up! Get your mind off your troubles. Do not think about them. Think of the bright things of life. Think with gratitude of the many good things you have, and be cheerful.

That cheerfulness brings its reward is a fact worthy of consideration. It is an investment that is always profitable. It has been well said by one, that "of all virtues, cheerfulness is the most profitable. It makes the person who exercises it happy, and renders him acceptable to all he meets. While other virtues delay the day of recompense, cheerfulness pays down."

We are told that one of the frequent prescriptions of Dr. Marshall Hall for his patients was "cheerfulness," which he always said was better than anything that he could get at the druggist's. A wise writer has said that "Mirth is God's medicine, and everybody ought to bathe in it." With Bancroft, the historian, who was a vigorous old man at ninety, it was a favorite saying with him that the secret of long life is in cheerfulness—never losing one's temper. Modern science shows that our mental moods have power to produce disease. Our personal well-being and desire for length of life should impel us to a life of cheerfulness.

We all love the cheerful man, woman or child. We invariably shun the gloomy and melancholy. We may pity and wish them well, but we do not love them; we do not enjoy being with them, and we avoid them as much as our consciences will allow. It will pay you well in friends and appreciation for to be always full of good cheer. "The cheerful live longest in years and afterwards in our hearts."

Our enjoyments are also nourished by cheerfulness. "I have been told," said Southey, "of the Spaniard who always put on spectacles when about to eat cherries, in order that the fruit might look larger and more tempting." The power of good cheer to magnify every enjoyment is known by all of us. It also magnifies troubles. Sidney Smith said on one occasion: "I have gout, asthma and seven other maladies, but am otherwise very well." Wesley said: "I feel and grieve, but by the grace of God, I fret at nothing." Then, too, cheerfulness honors religion. The spies that went over into Canaan and carried back of the good fruits of the country thereby invited the children of Israel to go forward and enter into the promised land. By our cheerfulness and faith in God under all circumstances, we honor Him and His religion, and give a wholesome and winsome invitation to others to enter into the land where such desirable fruits abound. A cheerful Jew shows to the world that he serves a good Master.

A great variety of motives, therefore, move us to this grace of cheerfulness, especially our own well-being, our regard for the dear ones of our household, and all about us, and loyalty to the Divine Master whom we serve.

"Blessed are the joy-makers."

The Jews in Guatemala.

Now in nearly every country where there is but a small number of Jewish people you will usually find a certain one of the number who is sort of leader or sponsor for the rest. So in a measure it is here. In Guatemala the most prominent Jews are the Stahl family, owners of the firm Schwartz & Co., consisting of Adolph Schwartz and Messrs. Adolph and Gustave Stahl. There is also another brother, Maximo Stahl, who organized and established a cotton mill, the only one in all of Central America, and who was the first to introduce into that country cotton grown in the United States. The firm of Schwartz & Co. was established more than 35 years ago and for the past 30 years it has been doing the bulk of the government banking and financing. Rumors have it that Adolph Stahl is a close friend of the President of the nation and together they have succeeded in putting through some financial deals which have won for the former the title of "financial genius" and have brought all their Central American financiers to his feet in admiration. This family migrated from San Francisco more than three decades ago and are today among the most eminent business and banking men of the nation. Two other banking and exporting concerns of Jewish American origin are Rosenthal & Sons and Claremont & Co.

The greater part of the other Jews in that country are German colonists who have gone to the tropics in search of fortune but with the ever-hopeful thought of returning to their native lands. There are also a few French and Turkish Jews. The colony also includes a learned physician from Austria-Hungary, whom I discovered to be a brother B'nai B'rith.

As in most other countries of the tropics, few of our Jewish men are married. They hesitate to bring Jewish wives to lands where customs and language are different from their own, where things are so strange and unusual. Then, too, there is the lack of Jewish atmosphere and association. The question of raising children in the faith is also a serious problem. The few married men send their young ones to the States or to Europe to obtain their education.—Harry O. Sandberg.

Twelve Hundred Organizations Call Meeting for Jewish Rights.

A grand demonstration in the interests of the movement for the attainment of equal rights for the Jews in European and other lands wherein such rights are denied them, has been called by 1,200 organizations of Manhattan, the Bronx and Brooklyn, all of which are associated with the American Jewish Congress. The meeting is to be held in Carnegie Hall on Wednesday, June 21.

The congress committees in the three boroughs are busily engaged in making all the necessary arrangements for this great meeting, at which prominent speakers will appear. Among these will be Judge Hugo Pam, of the Appellate Court of Illinois; the Hon. Charles B. Stricker, Assistant United States Treasurer, of Boston; and Rev. Dr. Stephen Wise. Mr. Nathan Straus will preside.

It is expected that not only the delegates of the 1,200 organizations, but a large quota of the membership of each organization will gather on this occasion and fill the large hall to capacity.

The ever-increasing interest which is being displayed in Jewish circles throughout the country in the struggle of the Jews in Europe for equal rights and in the question of holding an American Jewish congress on their behalf, tends to indicate that this meeting of the Jews of Greater New York will be one of the most enthusiastic ever held in the city.

A meeting of the Executive Organization Committee of the congress will be held at Aeolian Hall on Thursday afternoon, June 22.

Solomon Schechter Memorial Home.

The Jewish Home for Convalescents received its first inmates, twelve in number, on Sunday, June 4. The president of the institution, Dr. Julius Weiss; Mr. I. Aberman and Mr. Edward Stein, as well as the supervisor, Miss Blum, and Dr. Portugalof accompanied the inmates from New York to the home. At Sparkill the inmates were taken off the train and placed in automobiles, and were from there restored to the beautiful home, which is located in Grand View, N. Y.

The institution is a veritable paradise. It consists of a great concrete stone building, power and lighting plants, tool houses and nine acres of wooded land. It is located 500 feet above the sea level, and faces the Hudson River at its widest point, which is known as Tappan Zee. The inmates had a fine supper served at 6 o'clock. The patients came recommended from the Lebanon, Har Moriah, Beth David and Mount Sinai hospitals, Committee for the Care of Jewish Tuberculous and from the Lakeview Home, of Arroyo, S. I.

The Solomon Schechter Memorial Jewish Home for Convalescents has room for 150 inmates. Applications for admission to the home are pouring in daily, but owing to the lack of funds the society is compelled to limit the number of admissions.

Fake Kosher Butchers Being Prosecuted.

Commissioner of Weights and Measures Joseph Hartigan addressed a large gathering of rabbis, laymen, etc., interested in Kashruth last Monday afternoon in the Akerman Chamber, City Hall. In the last few months Hartigan has found fifty-seven butchers selling or exposing for sale meat and meat preparations falsely represented as kosher. Of this number seven have been fined $50 each. Cases against the others are pending.

Rev. Dr. Bernard Drachman, Mr. Edward R. Cohen and others made addresses.

Bar Mitzvah Celebration Aids War Sufferers.

On Sunday, May 28, there was a dual celebration in the beautiful residence of Mr. and Mrs. Morris Berman, 1428 Forty-eighth street, Borough Park—the Bar Mitzvah of their son Newton and a housewarming, on the occasion of their removal to their present residence.

At the festive board, beautifully prepared and served, there were seated the elite of Borough Park, and addresses were made by the well-known rabbinical sage, Rabbi I. Fried, the father of Mrs. Berman and the grandfather of the Bar Mitzvah; Mr. Wolf Nadler, president of the First Sphard Synagogue of Borough Park, of which Mr. Berman is trustee; Counselor H. S. Fried and the Bar Mitzvah himself.

Hon. Joseph Barondess was among those present, and he made an impassioned address and appeal on behalf of the war sufferers in Europe, and as a result the sum of $155 was realized.

CHILDREN'S PAGE

"TIS ALL FOR THE BEST!" Dear Children:—

Thus far we have spoken of prayer in general and now we ought to consider how thankful we ought to be to the Creator for the wonderful miracles that He performs for us in a manner that often seems to us very strange, and even unfortunate, and yet the ultimate result shows that "Tis all for the best."

human beings are as the blind, they look and they do not know what they are looking at, they hear and they do not know what they are hearing, and what they think is a piece of good fortune that happened to them often turns out just the contrary, and that which they imagine is an unlucky occurrence often turns out for their benefit.

The man getting his hair cut noticed that the barber's dog, which was lying on the floor beside the chair, had his eyes fixed on his master at work. "Nice dog, that," said the customer. "He is, sir."

And thus Rabbi Eliezer taught us, "What means the Psalmist by saying 'Give thanks to Him who doth great wonders alone?'" He meant to express the idea of the utter unconsciousness of the one for whom a miracle is performed, for very often the Holy One, blessed be He, saves a person from harm in a miraculous manner, whilst the person thinks just the contrary of that occurrence, for
