The editor paid for the lunch (as editors do). He lighted his seventh cigarette and leaned back. The conversation, which had zigzagged from the war to Zuloaga, and from Rasputin the Monk to the number of miles a Darrow would go on a gallon, narrowed down to the thin, straight line of business.

"Now don't misunderstand. Please: We're not presuming to dictate. Dear me, no! We have always felt that the writer should be free to express that which in his—ah—heart. But in the last year we've been swamped with these drab, realistic stories. Strong, relentless things, you know, about dish-washers, with a lot of fine detail about the fuzz of grease on the rim of the pan. Now, I'm not demanding a happy ending, exactly. But if you could—that is—would you—do you see your way at all clear to giving us a fairly cheerful story? Not necessarily Glad, but not so darned Russian, if you get me. Not pink, but not all grey either. Say—mauve."

That was Josie Fifer's existence. Mostly grey, with a dash of pink. Which makes mauve.

Unless you are connected (which you probably are not) with the great firm of Hahn & Lohman, theatrical producers, you never will have heard of Josie Fifer.

Josie Fifer was keeper of all the ghosts of the firm of Hahn & Lohman. Not only was she present at the birth of a play; she officiated at its funeral. She carried the keys to the closets that housed the skeletons of the firm. When a play died of inanition, old age, or—as was sometimes the case—before it was born, it was Josie Fifer who laid out its remains and followed it to the grave.

Josie's domain was the storage warehouse of Hahn & Lohman, as you may have guessed. If your business lay Forty-third street way, you might have passed the building a hundred times without once giving it a seeing glance. It was not Forty-third street of the small shops, the smart crowds, and the glittering motors. It was the Forty-third lying east of the Grand Central sluice gates; east of fashion; east, in a word, of Fifth avenue—a great square brick building smoke-grimed; cobwebbed, and having the look of a coldstorage plant or a car barn fallen into disuse; dusty, neglected almost eerie.

A worn flight of wooden steps leads up from the sidewalk to the

of every sort of clothing; and in the room beyond this, and beyond that, and again beyond that, row after row of high wooden cabinets stretching the width of the room, and form-shut and locked, they are, with the key in Josie's pocket. But when, at the behest of McCabe, or sometimes even Sid Hahn himself, she unlocked and opened one of these doors, what treasures hung revealed! What shimmer and sparkle and perfume and moth balls! The longtailed electric light bulb held high in one hand, Josie would stand at the door like a priestess before her altar.

There they swung, the ghosts and the skeletons, side by side.

Dresses there are that have made stage history.

Up one aisle and down the next—velvet, satin, lace and broadcloth—here the costume the great Canfield had worn in Richard III; there the little cocked hat and the slashed jerkin in which Maude Hammond, as Peterkins, winged her way to fame up through the hearts of a million children whose ages ranged from seven to seventy. Brocades and gingham; tailor suits and peignoirs; puffed sleeves and tight—dramatic history, all, they spelled failure, success, hope, despair, vanity, pride, triumph, decay. Tragic ghosts, over which Josie Fifer held grim sway!

Have I told you that Josie Fifer, moving nimbly about the great storehouse, limped as she went? The left leg swung as a normal leg should. The right followed haltingly, sagging at hip and knee. And that brings us back to the reason for her being where she was. And what.

Josie had been one of those little girls who speak pieces at entertainments held in the lodge room. Her mother had been a silly, idle woman addicted to mother hubbards and paper-backed novels about the house. Her one passion was the theatre, a passion that had very scant opportunity for feeding in Wapello, Iowa. Josie's piece-speaking talent was evidently a direct inheritance. Some might call it a taint.

Any one who has ever lived in Wapello, Iowa, or its equivalent, remembers the old opera house on the corner of Main and Elm, with Schroeder's drug store occupying the first floor. Opera never came within three hundred miles of Wapello, unless it was the so-called comic kind. It was before the day of the ubiquitous moving-picture theatre that has since been the undoing of the one-night stand and the ten-dim hallway; a musty-smelling passage wherein you are met by a genial sign which reads:

"No admittance. Keep out. This means you."

you are in Josie Fifer's kingdom—a great front room, unexpectedly bright and even cosy with its whir of sewing machines; tables, and tables, and tables, piled with orderly stacks ing innumerable aisles.

All of Bluebeard's wives could have been tucked away in one corner of the remotest and least of these, and no one the wiser. All grimly

EDNA FERBER

With this issue we begin a series of stories by Edna Ferber, who in the past few years has leaped into fame as one of the leading American writers of short stories. Miss Ferber, who is a Jewess, is a native of Appleton, Wis., and her first contributions were made to the local weekly paper. Later on she moved to Milwaukee and thence to Chicago where she now resides.

In addition to her short stories, Miss Ferber has written many popular books, the best known of which are "Mrs. McCasney," "Personality Plus," "Roast Beef Medium," "Fanny, Herself," and "Don O'Hara."

twenty-thirty stock company. The old red-brick opera house furnished unlimited thrills for Josie and her mother. From the time Josie was seven she was taken to see whatever Wapello was offered in the way of the drama. That consisted mostly of plays of the tell-me-more-about-me-mother type.

It was inevitable that as Josie grew older she would take part in homely plays. It was one of these tinsel affairs that had made clear to her just where her future lay. The Wapello Daily Courier helped her in her decision. She had taken the part of a gypsy queen, appropriately costumed in slightly soiled white satin slippers with four-inch heels, and a white satin dress enhanced by a red sash, a black velvet bolero, and large hoop earrings. She had danced and sung with a pert confidence, and the Courier had pronounced her talents not amateur, but professional, and had advised the managers (who, no doubt, read the Wapello Courier daily,) along with their Morning Telegraph) to seek her out, and speedily.

Josie didn't wait for them to take the hint. She sought them out instead. There followed seven tawdry, hard-working, heart-breaking years. Supe, walk-on, stock, musical comedy—Josie went through them all. If any illusions about the stage had survived her Wapello days, they would have vanished in the first six months of her dramatic career. By the time she was twenty-four she had acquired the wisdom of fifty, a near-seal coat, a turquoise ring with a number of smoky-looking crushed diamonds surrounding it, and a reputation for wit and for decency. The last had cost the most.

During all these years of cheap theatrical boarding house (the most soul-searing cheapness in the world), of one-night stands, of insult, disappointment, rebuff, and something that often came perilously near to want. Josie Fifer managed to retain a certain humorous outlook on life. There was something whimsical about it. She could even see a joke on herself.

And then came a Sunday afternoon in late August when her laugh broke off short in the middle, and was forever after a stunted thing.

She was playing Atlantic City in a second-rate musical show. She had never seen the ocean before, and she viewed it with an appreciation that still had in it something of a Wapello freshness.

They all planned to go in bathing that hot August afternoon after rehearsal. Josie had seen pictures of the beautiful bathing girl dashing into the foaming breakers. She ran across the stretch of glistening beach, paused and struck a pose, one toe pointed waterward, her arms extended affectedly.

"So!" she said mincingly. "So this is Paris!"

It was a new line in those days, and they all laughed, as she had meant they should. So she leaped into the water with bounds and shouts and much waving of white arms. A great floating derelict of a log struck her leg with its full weight, and with all the tremendous force of the breaker behind it. She doubled up ridiculously, and went down like a shot. Those on the beach laughed again. When she came up, and they saw her distorted face they stopped laughing, and fished her out. Her leg was broken in two places, and mashed in a dozen.

Josie Fifer's dramatic career was over. (This is not the cheery portion of the story.)

When she came out of the hospital, three months later, she did very well indeed, with her crutches. But the merry-eyed woman had vanished—she of the Wapello coloring that had persisted during all these years. In her place limped a wan, shrunken, tragic, little figure whose humor had soured to a caustic wit. The near-seal coat and the turquoise-and-crushed-diamond ring had vanished too.

During those agonized months she had received from the others in the company such kindness and generosity as only stage folks can show—flowers, candy, dainties, magazines, sent by every one from the prima donna to the call boy. Then the show left town. There came a few letters of kind inquiry, then an occasional post card, signed by half a dozen members of the company. Then these ceased. Josie Fifer, in her cast and splints and bandages and pain, dragged out long hospital days and interminable hospital nights.

When she was able to crawl out as far as the long corridor she spoke to every one she met. As she grew stronger she visited here and there, and on the slightest provocation she would give a scene, ranging all the way from "Romeo and Juliet" to "The Black Crook." It was thus she first met Sid Hahn, and felt the warming, healing glow of his friendship.

Some said that Sid Hahn's brilliant success as a manager at thirty-five was due to his ability to pick winners. Others thought it was his refusal to be discouraged when he found he had picked a failure. Sid Hahn, erstwhile usher, call boy, press agent, advance man, had a genius for things theatrical. It was inborn. Dramatic, sensitive, artistic, intuitive, he was often rendered inarticulate by the very force and variety of his feelings. A little, round, ugly man, Sid Hahn, with the eyes of a dreamer, the wide, mobile mouth of a humorist, the ears of a comic o'-clo'es man.

In September he had come to Atlantic City to try out "Splendour." It was a doubtful play, by a new author, starring Sarah Haddon for the first time. No one dreamed the play would run for years, make a fortune for Hahn, lift Haddon from obscurity to the dizzy heights of stardom, and become a classic of the stage.

Ten minutes before the curtain went up on the opening performance, Hahn was stricken with appendicitis. There was not even time to rush him to New York. He was on the operating table before the second act was begun. When he came out of the ether he said: "How did it go?"

"Fine!" beamed the nurse. "You'll be out in two weeks."

"Oh, hell! I don't mean the operation. I mean the play."

He learned soon enough from the glowing, starry-eyed Sarah Haddon and from every one connected with the play. He insisted on seeing them all daily, against his doctor's orders, and succeeded in working up a temperature that made his hospital stay a four weeks' affair. He refused to take the tryout results as final and the company stayed over in Atlantic City for a week, and Hahn held scraps of rehearsals in his room when he had a temperature of 102. Sarah Haddon worked like a slave. She seemed to realize that her great opportunity had come—the opportunity for which hundreds of gifted actresses wait a lifetime. Haddon was just twenty-eight then—a year younger than Josie Fifer. She had not yet blossomed into the full radiance of her beauty. She was too slender, and inclined to stoop a bit, but her eyes were glorious, her skin petal-smooth, her whole face reminding one, somehow, of an intelligent flower. Her voice was a golden, liquid delight.

Josie Fifer, dragging herself from bed to chair, and from chair to bed, used to watch for her. Hahn's room was on her floor. Sarah Haddon, in her youth and beauty and triumph, represented to Josie all that she had dreamed of and never realized; all that she had hoped for and never could know. She used to insist on having her door open, and she would lie there for hours, her eyes fixed on that spot in the hall across which Haddon would flash for one brief instant on her way to the room down the corridor. As she lay there she developed a certain grim philosophy.

"She's got everything a woman could wish for. Me, I haven't got a thing. Not a blamed thing! And yet they say everything works out in the end according to some scheme or other. Well, what's the answer to this, I wonder? I can't make it come out right. I guess one of the figures must have got away from me."

In the second week of Sid Hahn's convalescence he heard, somehow, of Josie Fifer. It was characteristic of him that he sent for her. She put a chiffon scarf about the neck of her skimpy little kimono, spent an hour and ten minutes on her hair, made up outrageously with the sublime unconsciousness that comes from too close familiarity with rouge pad and grease jar, and went. Between the crutches, the lameness, and the trembling she presented to Sid Hahn, as she stood in the doorway, a picture that stabbed his kindly, sensitive heart with a quick pang of sympathy.

He held out his hand. Josie's crept into it. At the feel of that generous friendly clasp she stopped trembling. Said Hahn:

"My nurse tells me that you can do a bedside burlesque of 'East Lynne' that made even that Boston-looking interne with the thick glasses laugh. Go on and do it for me, there's a good girl. I could use a laugh myself just now."

And Josie Fifer caught up a couch cover for a cloak, with the scarf that was about her neck for a veil, and, using Hahn himself as the ailing child, gave a biting burlesque of the famous bedside visit that brought the tears of laughter to his eyes, and the nurse flying from down the hall. "This won't do," said that austere person.

"Won't, eh? Go on and stick your old thermometer in my mouth. What do I care! A laugh like that is worth five degrees of temperature."

When Josie rose to leave he eyed her keenly, and pointed to the dragging leg.

"How about that? Temporary or permanent?"

"Permanent."

"Then no more stage for you—eh, my girl?"

"No more stage."

Hahn reached for a pad of paper on the table at his bedside, scrawled a few words on it, signed it "S. H." in the fashion which became famous and held the paper out to her.

"When you get out of here," he said, "you come to New York, and up to my office; see? Give 'em this at the door. I've got a job for you—if you want it."

And that was how Josie Fifer came to take charge of the great Hahn & Lohman storehouse. It was more than a storehouse. It was a museum. It housed the archives of the American stage. If Hahn & Lohman prided themselves on one thing more than on another, it was the lavish generosity with which they invested a play, from costumes to carpets. A period play was a period play when they presented it. You never saw a French clock on a Dutch mantel in a Hahn & Lohman production. No hybrid hangings marred their back drop. No matter what the play, the firm provided its furnishings from the star's slippers to the chandeliers. Did a play last a year or a week, at the end of its run furniture, hangings, scenery, rugs, gowns, everything went off in wagonloads to East Forty-third street.

No gently sentimental reason caused Hahn & Lohman to house these hundreds of costumes, those tons of scenery, these forests of furniture. Neither had Josie Fifer been hired to walk wistfully among them like a spinster wandering in a dead rose garden. No, they were stored for a much thriftier reason. They were stored, if you must know, for possible future use. H. & L. were too clever not to use a last year's costume for a this year's road show.

They knew what a coat of enamel would do for a bedroom set. It was Josie Fifer's duty not only to tabulate and care for these relics, but to refurbish them when necessary. The sewing was done by a little corps of assistants under Josie's direction.

But all this came with the years. When Josie Fifer, white and weak, first took charge of the H. & L. lares et penates, she told herself it was only for a few months—a year or two at most. The end of sixteen years found her still there.

When she came to New York, "Splendour" was just beginning its phenomenal three years' run. The city was mad about the play. People came to see it again and again—a sure sign of a long run. The Sarah Haddon second-act costume was photographed, copied (unsuccessfully), talked about, until it became as familiar as a uniform. That costume had much to do with the play's success, though Sarah Haddon would never admit it. "Splendour" was what is known as a period play. The famous dress was of black velvet, made with a quaint, full-gathered skirt that made Haddon's slim waist seen fairly like and exquisitely supple. The black velvet bodice outlined the delicate swell of the bust. A rope of pearls enhanced the whiteness of her throat. Her hair, done in oldtime scallops about her forehead, was a gleaming marvel of simplicity, and the despair of every woman who tried to copy it. The part was that of an Italian opera singer. Sarah Haddon, in her flowing black velvet robe and her pearls and her pallor, was an exotic, throbbing, exquisite realization of what every woman in the audience dreamed of being and every man dreamed of loving.

Josie Fifer saw the play for the first time from a balcony seat given her by Sid Hahn. It left her trembling, reved, shaken. After that she used to see it, by hook or crook, whenever possible. She used to come in at the stage door and lurk back of the scenes and in the wings when she had no business there. Then, one night, she indiscreetly was led, by her absorbed interest, to venture too far into the wings. It was during the scene where Haddon, hearing a broken-down street singer cracking the golden notes of "Aida" into a thousand mutilated fragments, throws open her window and, leaning far out, pours a shower of Italian and broken English and laughter and silver coin upon her amazed compatriot below.

When the curtain went down she came off raging.

"What was that? Who was that standing in the wings? How dare any one stand there! Staring! It ruined my scene tonight. Where's McCabe? Tell Mr. Hahn I want to see him. Who was it? Staring at me like a ghost!"

Josie had crept away, terrified, contrite, and yet resentful. But the next week saw her back at the theatre, though she took care to stay in the shadows.

She was waiting for the black velvet dress. It was more than a dress to her. It was infinitely more than a stage costume. It was the habit of glory. It epitomized all that Josie Fifer had missed of beauty and homelike and success.

The play ran on, and on, and on. Sarah Haddon was superstitious about the black gown. She refused to give it up for a new one. She insisted that if ever she discarded the old black velvet for a new the run of the play would stop.

But Josie waited patiently. Dozens of costumes passed through her hands. She saw plays come and go. She sewed on satin. She mended fine lace. She polished stage jewels. And waited. She knew that one day her patience would be rewarded. And then, at last came the familiar voice over the phone: "Hello, Fifer! McCabe talking."

"Well?"

"'Splendour' closed Saturday. Haddon says she won't play in this heat. They're taking it to London in the autumn. The stuff'll be up Monday, early."

Josie Fifer turned away from the telephone with radiant face.

The look was still on her face when Monday morning came. She was sewing on a dress just discarded by Adelaide French, the tragedienne. McCabe, box under his arm, stood in the doorway. Josie Fifer stood up so suddenly that the dress on her lap fell to the floor. She stepped over it heedlessly, and went toward McCabe, her eyes on the pasteboard box. Behind McCabe stood two more men, likewise box-laden.

"Put them down here," said Josie. Then men thumped the boxes down on the long table. Josie's fingers were already at the strings. She opened the first box, emptied its contents, tossed them aside, passed on to the second. Her hands busied themselves among the silks and broadcloth of this; then on to the third and last box. Josie snapped the cord that bound the third box. Her cheeks were flushed, her eyes bright. She turned it upside down. Then she pawed it over. She was breathing quickly. Suddenly: "It isn't here!" she cried. "It isn't here!" She turned and flew to the stairway. The voices of the men came up to her. She leaned far over the railing. "McCabe! McCabe!"

"Yeh? What do you want?"

"The black velvet dress! The black velvet dress! It isn't there!"

"Oh, yeh. That's all right. Haddon, she's got a bug about that dress, and she says she wants to take it to London with her, to use on the opening night. She says if she wears a new one that first night the play'll be a failure. Some temperament, that girl, since she's got to be a star!"

Josie stood clutching the railing of the stairway. Her disappointment was so bitter that she could not weep. She felt cheated, outraged. "She might have let me have it," she said aloud in the dim half light of the hallway. "She's got everything else in the world. She might have let me have that."

Then she went back into the big, bright sewing room. "Splendour" ran three years in London.

During those three years she saw Sid Hahn only three or four times. He spent much of his time abroad. Whenever opportunity presented itself she would say: "Is 'Splendour' still playing in London?"

"Still playing."

At the end of three years Sarah Haddon returned to New York with an English accent, a slight embonpoint, and a little foreign habit of rushing up to her men friends with a delighted exclamation (preferably French) and kissing them on both cheeks.

The scenery, props, and costumes of the London production of "Splendour" were slow in coming back.

But finally they did come. Josie received them with the calmness that comes of hope deferred. It had been three years since she last saw the play. She told herself, chidingly, that she had been sort of foolish over that play and this costume. Her recent glimpse of Haddon had been somewhat disillusioning. But now, when she finally held the gown itself in her hand—the original "Splendour" second-act gown, a limp, soft black mass: just a few yards of worn and shabby velvet—she found her hands shaking. She folded the dress over her arm and carried it to the wardrobe room. There she hung it away in an empty closet, quite apart from the other historic treasures. And there it hung, untouched, until the following Sunday.

On Sunday morning East Forty-third street bears no more resemblance to the week-day Forty-third than does a stiffly starched and subdued Sabbath-school scholar to his Monday morning self. Strangely quiet it is, and unfrequented. Josie Fifer, scurrying along in the unwonted stillness, was prompted to throw a furtive glance over her shoulder now and then, as though afraid of being caught at some criminal act. She ran up the little flight of steps with a rush, unlocked the door with trembling fingers, and let herself into the cool, dark gloom of the storehouse hall. The metal door of the elevator stared inquiringly after her. She fled past it to the stairway. Every step of that ancient structure squeaked and groaned. First floor, second, third, fourth. The everyday hum of the sewing machine was absent. The room seemed to be holding its breath. Josie, a tense, wide-eyed, frightened little figure, stood in the center of the vast room, listening to she knew not what. Then, relaxing she gave a nervous little laugh and reaching up, unpinned her hat. She threw it on a near-by table and disappeared into the wardrobe room.

Minutes passed—an hour. She did not come back. From the room beyond came strange sounds—a woman's voice; the thrill of a song; cries; the anguish of tears; laughter, harsh and high, as a desperate and deceived woman laughs—all this following in such rapid succession that Sid Hahn, puffing laboriously up the four flights of stairs leading to the wardrobe floor, entered the main room unheard. Unknown to any one, he was indulging in one of his unsuspected visits to the old warehouse that housed the evidence of past and gone successes—successes that had brought him fortune and fame, but no real happiness, perhaps.

At the doorway he paused, now startled. He was listening with every nerve of his taut body. What? Who? He tiptoed across the room with a step incredibly light for one so stout, peered cautiously around the side of the doorway, and leaned up against it weakly. Josie Fifer, in the black velvet and mock pearls of "Splendour," her grey-streaked blonde hair hidden under the romantic scallops of a black wig, was giving the big scene from the third act. And though it sounded like a burlesque of that famous passage, and though she limped more than ever as she reeled to an imaginary shrine in the corner, and though the black wig was slightly askew by now, and the velvet hung with bunched awkwardness about her skinny little body, there was nothing of mirth in Sid Hahn's face as he gazed. He shrank back now.

She was coming to the big speech at the close of the act—the big renunciation speech that was the curtain. Sid Hahn turned and tiptoed painfully, breathlessly, magnificently, out of the big front room, into the hallway, down the creaking stairs, and so to the sunshine of Forty-third street, with its unaccustomed Sunday morning quiet. And he was smiling that rare and melting smile of his—the smile that was said to make him look something like a kewpie, and something like a cupid, and a bit like an imp, and very much like an angel. There was little of the first now; very much of the last.

"Why, the poor little kid," said he—"the poor, lonely, stifled little crippledup kid."

And here it must be revealed to you that Sid Hahn did not marry the Cinderella of the storage warehouse. He did not marry anybody, and neither did Josie. And yet there is a bit more to this story—ten years more, if you must know—ten years, the end of which found Josie a sparse, spectacled, and agile little cripple, as alert and caustic as ever. It found Sid Hahn the most famous theatrical man of his day. It found Sarah Haddon at the fag-end of a career that had blazed with triumph and adulation. She had never had a success like "Splendour." Indeed, there were those who said that all the plays that followed had been failures, carried to semi-success on the strength of that play's glorious past.

And then, in a mistaken moment, they planned a revival of "Splendour." Sarah Haddon would again play the part that had become a classic. Fathers had told their children of it—of her beauty, her golden voice, the exquisite grace of her, the charm, the tenderness, the pathos.

So they revived "Splendour." And men and women brought their sons and daughters to see. And what they saw was a stout, middle-aged woman in a too-tight black velvet dress that made her look like a dowager. And when this woman flopped down on her knees in the big scene at the close of the last act she had a rather dreadful time of it in getting up again. And the audience, resentful, bewildered, cheated of a precious memory, laughed. That laugh sealed the career of Sarah Haddon.

"Away with it!" cried the critics through the columns of next morning's paper. And Sarah Haddon's day was done.

"It's because I didn't wear the original black velvet dress!" cried she, with the unreasoning rage for which she had always been famous. "If I had worn it, everything would have been different. That dress had a good luck charm. Where is it? I want it. I don't care if they do take off the play. I want it. I want it."

Sid Hahn flushed uncomfortably. "Well, if you must know, I gave it away."

"To whom?"

"To—to Josie Fifer. She took a notion to it, and so I told her she could have it." Then, as Sarah Haddon rose, dried her tears, and began to straighten her hat: "Where are you going?"

But she was off, and Sid Hahn could only follow after, the showman in him anticipating the scene that was to follow. When he reached the fourth floor of the storehouse Sarah Haddon was there ahead of him. The two women—one tall, imperious, magnificent in furs; the other shrunken, deformed, shabby—stood staring at each other from opposite sides of the work table. And between them, in a crumpled, grey-black heap, lay the velvet gown.

"I don't care, who says you can have it," Josie Fifer's shrill voice was saying. "It's mine, and I'm going to keep it. Mr. Hahn himself gave it to me. Didn't you, Mr. Hahn? Didn't you say I could have it—years ago?"

"Yes, Jo," said Hahn. "It's yours to do with as you wish.” Sarah Haddon, who never had been denied anything in all her pampered life, turned to him now. Her bosom rose and fell. She was breathing sharply. “But, S. H.!” she cried, “I want it! It’s all I’ve got left in the world of what I used to be. I want it!” She began to cry, and it was not acting.

Josie Fifer stood staring at her, her eyes wide with horror and unbelief.

“Why, say, listen! Listen! You can have it. I didn’t know you wanted it as bad as that. Why, you can have it. I want you to take it. Here.”

She shoved it across the table. Sarah reached out for it quickly. She rolled it up in a tight bundle and whisked off with it without a backward glance at Josie or at Hahn.

The two stood staring at each other ludicrously. Hahn spoke first.

“I’m sorry, Josie. That was nice of you, giving it to her like that.”

But Josie did not seem to hear. Then suddenly she began to laugh. She laughed a high, shrill laugh, that was not so much an expression of mirth as of relief.

Sid Hahn put up a pudgy hand in protest. “Josie! Please! For the love of Heaven don’t you go and get it!”

“I wasn’t hysterical. I was just laughing. I’ve been about seventeen years learning that laugh!”

“Let’s have the plot,” said Hahn.

“There isn’t any. You see, it’s just—well, I’ve just discovered how it works out. After all these years! She’s had everything she wanted all her life. And me, I’ve never had anything. Not a thing. She’s traveled one way, and I’ve traveled in the opposite direction, and where has it brought us? Here we are, both fighting over an old black velvet rag. Don’t you see? Both wanting the same—” She broke off, with the little twisted smile on her lips again. “Life’s a strange thing.”

“I hope, Josie, you don’t claim any originality for that remark,” replied Sid Hahn dryly.

“But,” argued the editor, “you don’t call this a cheerful story, I hope.”

“Well, perhaps not exactly boisterous. But it teaches a lesson, and all that. And it’s sort of philosophical and everything, don’t you think?”

The editor shuffled the sheets together decisively, so that they formed a neat sheaf. “I’m afraid I didn’t make myself quite clear. It’s entertaining, and all that, but—in view of our present needs, I’m sorry to say we—”

THE SHOFAR’S MESSAGE.
A Rosh Hashonah Story.

By E. C. EHRLICH.

Reuben Finkelstein came home from work early that autumn afternoon. The foreman at the shop, being a thoughtful man, had dismissed the hands several hours earlier than usual that they might have ample time to make the needful preparations for Erev Rosh Hashonah. But Reuben did not go home at once. Instead he sat down on one of the benches in Seward Square to rest a little and to think things over.

The boy was not at all happy. Six years before he had made the long journey from Galicia to win a fortune in America—a fortune for himself and Bertha. He had been slow in gathering the fortune, for it had not taken him long to discover that the streets in America were not paved with gold. But he had won Bertha—and still he was not satisfied. Bertha was just his age. He left her in Galicia, a slim-shy-eyed maiden of sixteen, who, had he been addicted to the vice of novel reading, would have represented to him all the beauties and noble qualities with which the writer folk endow their heroines. Four years later he sent her a money order enclosed in a letter so moving and passionate that it would have been hard to convince the stranger that the cramped Yiddish sentences had been penned by an unlearned sweatshop worker. Bertha cried over the letter and bought a steamship ticket with the money order. A few months later the lovers were reunited in America, and the great dream began.

But the dream ended very soon, for it had nothing to feed on. America had opened Reuben’s eyes, had awakened the dreamer in his soul. The men from his shop who talked politics over their stale sandwiches at noon, the Socialist orators to whom he listened open-mouthed in the public square near the factory, the teachers at the night school who had taught him to read and write English, all of these had driven away the shadows of his cramped boyhood, had let in the light. But poor Bertha had come to America four years later. It was not so easy for her to catch up with her ambitious young husband.

I doubt whether she ever tried. She had been bred in the tradition of housewifely ideals. She never dreamed that a husband could demand anything more of his wife than faithful obedience, modest reserve. So she kept his house after the manner of her mother and her mother’s mother before her, seldom stirring outside save to go to the market, her basket on the arm. She always patronized the market on the corner where the proprietor spoke Yiddish. It never occurred to her to try to learn English.

Several years later the baby came—a big-eyed morsel whom the anxious mother kept swathed in flannels even in burning July. Reuben, who used his eyes and noticed the airy comfort of the babies in the square, protested. But in all things concerning little Benjamin his wife was adamant. She had a mother’s heart, she said, and a mother’s heart is never mistaken. And so she continued to swaddle the fretful little one, whom she had started to feed with choice bits from the family table—potatoes and gravy, herring, tastes of cabbage. It didn’t seem to thrive, despite all her coddling, but Bertha shrilly refused to take the child to the infant welfare station at the settlement.

“A mother’s heart knows,” she assured her husband. “God forbid it I should let goyim tell me how to take care of my child.”

Somehow the baby managed to pull through his fretful second summer. Reuben fell into the habit of spending his evenings in one of the near-by coffee houses, chatting with men from the shop, undisturbed by Benjamin’s wailing. Sometimes he visited several of the married hands and their wives. These women were all more Americanized than his Bertha. Their cheap dresses were “up to date.” Even when there were young children they seemed to find time to keep the house in order, to prepare a simple supper after a card game. Bertha did none of these things. She had taken to wearing sloppy wrappers when nursing the baby; even now they were generally half open, while her uncombed hair fell about her fretful face. And the little flat in which she no longer took any pride, since it had become a prison to her, was just as untidy. Reuben wondered wearily why she was not a little more like these other wives, who did not fall behind their husbands as the years went on.

The golden September twilight deepened about the boy as he sat there watching the dry brown leaves swirling down the path. He was tired, intensely tired, of it all. He had come to America with such high hopes, such glowing ideals—and Bertha had been a part of them. But in those days he had never dreamed of her as a weary-eyed slattern, a whining youngster tugging at her skirts as she dragged about her untidy kitchen.

He rose abruptly, walking swiftly toward home. He was going to end it, end this barren, bitter existence which was slowly crushing his youth beneath its weight. He had made a mistake, that was all; now he would redeem himself. With the few dollars from his last week’s salary he still carried in his pocket, he would purchase a railway ticket; he didn’t care where, as long as he could leave New York. He would find work in another city and send Bertha and the child enough to live on; but he would be free. Free to dream and plan once more; quiet evenings away from the little kitchen with Bertha’s complaints anent the rising scale of prices at the corner grocery, away from the baby’s dreary wailing. How he would spend those blessed evenings after the day’s work was over, spend them as he had done before his marriage reading in a public library or over his desk, writing, only to destroy and begin to write once more. In the prison of his home life he had ceased to struggle to create; now he felt the eternal urge once more. He would pour his whole soul out on paper, he told himself, the soul of the imprisoned Jew, groping his way through the darkness into freedom.

Reuben in his preoccupation had wandered further than he knew. Looking up he saw that he had walked a goodly distance past his own house. He smiled a little to see that he was still in a distinctly Jewish neighborhood, that a little schul stood just a few doors away. Men and women in holiday attire made their way up the steps, and Reuben, obeying an impulse he hardly understood, followed them and entered the building. He intended to cut himself loose from all Jewish things after tonight, just as he would free himself from Bertha. Why not visit a synagogue just as he would look into his home for the last time?

Reuben had no ticket, but a bill passed between him and the smug shammass at the door and he passed in with the rest. Sick unto death of the long day's grind in the stale air amid the whirring machines, he felt a sudden nausea seize him here in this close little place, the atmosphere heavy with the smell of human bodies, a continual murmur about him like the murmur of insects—or machines. He half rose to go, yet sank back into his seat. He had not been in a synagogue for years, for what need had he, an emancipated intellectual, for public prayer? But now something drew him back, kept him rooted in his place. Memories of the days when he was hardly older than Benjamin seized him and held him fast. He did not hear the service that followed; he was reliving the old life he had found so cruelly cramping and confining, yet now, that he viewed it from a distance, so beautiful in its simple acceptance of duty, so peaceful because the Jewish soul had learned freedom beneath the heavy yoke of the law.

The restless seeker after freedom thought of his father then, that quiet old scholar among his books, seldom leaving them save for a visit with his cronies in the Beth Hamidrash or to enter the synagogue. He had taken Reuben with him very early; it was by his side that the child had first heard the clear ringing call of the shofar. And his mother, that sharp-faced, shrill-voiced woman who had kept the shop that his father might give his days and his nights to the Torah. Bertha was much like her; now that he came to think of it, Bertha who never opened a book or looked up at the stars. There was nothing in common between his parents; he saw that for the first time. And he saw also with a sudden clarity of vision that despite their lack of sympathy, their divergent ideals, they had been truly one in spirit as well as in flesh. They had shared one hope, one joy in common, their hope and pride in their only son, their Kaddish. He had long ago forgotten their Yahrzeits, yet he suddenly wished that some day in the dim years ahead little Benjamin grown to manhood would say Kaddish for him, rise before all men to honor his memory.

And he was about to forget Benjamin, as he had forgotten his parents! This was the sort of freedom for which he had longed, a freedom from all duties, all responsibilities. Reuben's dark cheeks burned with shame. What had he done to win Bertha to his ideals, to make her a worthier mother of their child? He had not even tried to share her responsibilities, her fears for the little one. Was it too late, he wondered, to bind himself to her anew with the same bond which had held his own parents united and content during their long wedded life, their common love for their son. Suddenly he recalled a line of Rashi read years before, long buried in his brain under diverse quotations from Karl Marx and Darwin—that when it was written that man and his wife shall be one flesh, it signified that they should be joined forever in the flesh of their child. And then he knew that he would never even dream of leaving Bertha again.

The services for Erev Roshashonah over, he made his way with the others through crowded aisles to the door. There he paused for a moment for a word with the shammass. When he left him, Reuben carried in his pocket several tickets for the Rosh Hashonah services the next day. Perhaps he could persuade Bertha, who seldom left the house, to come with them. In any case, he was resolved to bring little Benjamin to hear the shofar announce a New Year for the house of Israel—just as his own father had done in his faraway childhood. He felt that with the child's hand in his own, it would be easier to obey the summons of the ancient battle cry and answer, "I am ready." For Reuben realized at last that the debt to little Benjamin must be paid, that in the years to be he must find his fullest freedom beneath the burden of the law.

A ROSH HASHONAH LETTER A Modern Story.

By ELMA E. LEVINGER.

Somewhere in France,
September 20, 1918.

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Meyers:

I don't suppose you remember me. I'm Jake's friend, the boy from his office, and he had me up for Friday night supper when we got leave from Camp Upton just before we were sent across. Jake told me he intended to write you all about how we spent Rosh Hashonah over here; but he couldn't. So I'm going to, and I guess you'll be glad to know he enjoyed it so much.

Well, we got two days' leave for Yom tov, and we came down to —. It's no use writing the name of the town 'cause the censor will cut it out, anyhow. Jake was tickled to death about it—getting leave and a chance to go to schul again. Same as me. I never went out of my way at home to go to schul, but over here it's different. After you haven't seen a rabbi or heard a word of Hebrew for almost a year, anything Jewish looks good to you.

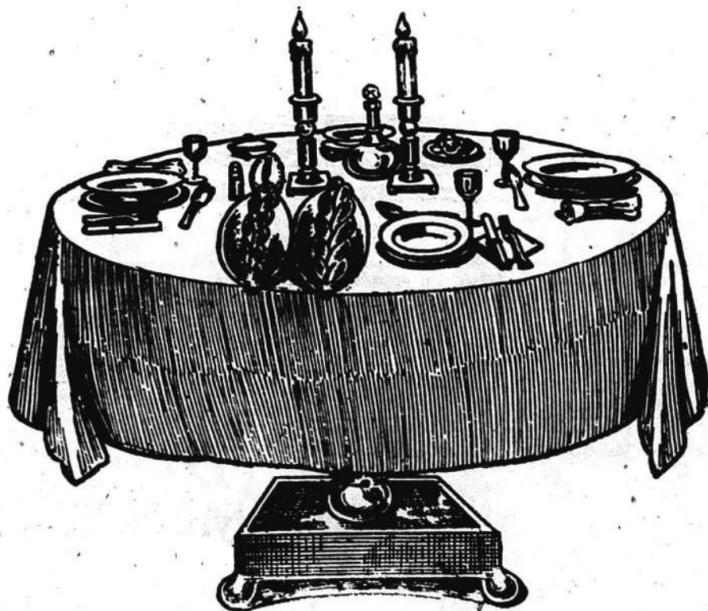

There were about a hundred Jewish families in that town they sent us to for Yom tov, and they had a nice little schul, but awfully small; I guess it usually didn't hold over a hundred and fifty people or so. But we fellows packed the aisles all right and sat in the window sills, and those who couldn't squeeze in any way at all just walked around and enjoyed ourselves seeing the town, and went back when it was time for some of the others to get out and give us a part of the service.

The service was mighty interesting. These French Jews are mighty strict and try to do everything just so in schul. Every one of the men had his own talith, but, of course, we fellows didn't have any. So when they called up one of the boys to read from the Torah he had to borrow one. And the first fellow who went up was your Jake. I knew you'd be glad to hear that.

It was like this. These Frogs (I mean these Frenchmen) are awfully polite when they want to be, and they wanted to show us the schul was ours as long as we cared to stay.

So when it came time read the Torah the shammass asked who were Cohens among the fellows. You ought to have seen the hands. But Jake got way in the front—like always—and they called him up to read first. He always was in luck. I thought you'd like to know he said the brocha just fine. He told me once how you sent him regularly to cheder while he was in grammar school, and you wouldn't have been ashamed to see how well he remembered that Hebrew. And when he got through he took off his talith and they called up a French soldier for Levi, and he stood up there with the talith on his blue uniform and looking like Jake—just as though he enjoyed being called to the Torah again. Next they took another American—Captain Rosenthal, of our medical corps. He's a fine fellow and he always thought a lot of Jake.

They blew the shofar and everything. It was a great Rosh Hashonah service, and we were all mighty happy to be together like that, but it was awfully sad, too. A lot of the women were in black and there was a lot of crying when we all stood up and said the Kaddish. There wasn't a one of us there who hadn't lost somebody we cared for in the war—

Stout Women

For almost twenty years we have specialized in the designing and making of clothes for stout women. We have fitted and measured over 250,000 stout women and consequently understand the requirements of the stout figure as no other house does. Our garments designed as the result of all this experience positively reduce the apparent size of the wearer and give the much desired appearance of slenderness.

Sizes 38½ to 56 bust

Our special system of measurements provides for every type of stout figure, whether tall or short, long waisted or short waisted, large hips or small hips.

By actual count we fit 87 out of every 100 stout women who come into our store—practically without alterations.

I want you to remember that.

Several of us had dinner with Monsieur Simone. It was a fine dinner, too, if you like French cooking, but I'm pretty tired of it myself. And we had a lot of fun talking and joking with his two girls. You bet I was glad I knew Yiddish. If I'd have had to depend on my French I'd have had to keep still. They were nice looking girls, and certainly tried to show us a grand time. I think one of them wouldn't have minded flirting with Jake a little, but you know how that kid always was when he had his mind made up to anything! He told her right out about Sadie Minz, and bragged about her to the other girls and showed them her picture. You'd better tell Sadie that; it ought to please her.

Monsieur Simone is awfully interested in America. He has a cousin in New Jersey, and he said that maybe, after the war is over, he'll come and visit him. But we didn't talk much about the war ending, though things look a little better since we all came over here. It ought to be over soon, and, God knows, it can't come too quick for me.

You know we were promised two days' leave, but we never got them. We had to go back the end of the first day, which was hard luck, as we had another invitation for dinner the next day. But business is business, like Jake used to say when some of the fellows at the office used to kid him for cutting his lunch hour short sometimes to get some work out quicker. Jake always did believe in doing more than he was paid for—not that it ever got him anywhere.

So we were called back 'cause our outfit went up to the line the next day. There was a big drive on, and I wish I could tell you about it; but I can't. It's not allowed. And I wish I didn't have to tell you why Jake never got a chance to write you about our good times Rosh Ha- shonah. But I was his buddy here, same as at home, and I know he'd like you to hear all about it from me.

Though there isn't much to tell. Did I tell you I got my corporal's stripes a few months ago? So I took my squad out to clean up a machine-gun nest. Jake was right next to me, and we were going ahead together. You know how it is—wiggling along in front of the thing right on our bellies and some of the others crawling up to cover the side and throw a bomb or two and quiet 'em. Just before those fellows on the side got there Jake was hit in the shoulder. As I was dragging him in a shell hole they saw us and trained their fire on us, and we got it straight. I'm in the hospital now, but Jake never looked up any more. It all went so quick I'm sure he didn't suffer any. I knew you'd be glad to know that.

I don't have to tell you how sorry I am to be writing this. That's why I stalled off so long and wrote about other things; but I knew I had to come to this part of my letter anyhow. And I didn't want to write about it, because he was such a good friend of mine.

When I get better I think they'll send me home maybe. And if they do I'll come and see you.

Yours sincerely,
CORP. MART JACOBSEN, 307th Infantry.

P. S.—I thought you'd be glad to know we took that machine gun and killed the machine gunners. Only it didn't help Jake any then.

TRAVEL PICTURES.

By I. L. PEREZ.

It was the end of the period of good and the beginning of the period of evil. The heavens were decked with massive black clouds which, we prayed, would be borne out of sight by a sudden storm to burst over a distant desert. In Europe's well cultivated garden the dark plant of hatred already burst forth, its thorny parts were quite conspicuous in the sunlight, its ugly leaves mocked the sunlight. "Let but the gardener sight it once," we consoled ourselves, "and he will surely pluck it out."

What innocent contentment was ours. And how great was our amazement to find that the gardener not only knew of the blooming of the dark flower, but he had planted it himself, and every morning he caressed it and warmed its thorny sides with his own tender hands. It then occurred to me that the destiny of Israel was its own, and I decided to learn more about our people, and I have set down faithfully the account of my travels throughout the Jewish towns of Europe in the faith that an increase of self-knowledge in Israel will give birth to a stronger and more independent national will.

The first town I came to was Tishowitz, where I put up with my old friend, Reb Boruch. Reb Boruch immediately sent for the deacon and several of the important proprietors of the community. While waiting for these worthies to arrive I observed the market place through the window of my old friend's house.

The market is a large square, on the four sides of which rise rows of black, crookedly built houses, mostly of straw and wood.

Some of the houses were one floor high, with ample white painted balconies. These were situated at some space from one another, and gave an impression of neatness. The rest were huddled together as though they had been buried in the earth and had suddenly been chased out by some monster and were ashamed in the light. In front of these houses sat a multitude of women, engaged in trade. Some of the women were young and some of them were old.

The latter wore thick black shawls out of which only their blue mouths showed with an occasional tooth. The young ones wore colored kerchiefs over their hair, and were not as industrious as the older women. They relished more gossiping among themselves or gazing after strangers.

My appearance had attracted the attention of several of the older women and they were regarding me with a certain amount of deep feeling. They were chattering volubly. Most likely they knew that I had come to write them up.

Most of their conversation was in too low a tone of voice for me to be able to make out what they were saying. I understood from their gestures that being written up was a novelty which they did not yet know, and they must have given some original interpretations of the general value of my functions. But one of them passed right under my window and, with utter disregard for my comfort, shouted across her little stand of wares (I think she was selling stockings), "Let them better send us several hundred rubles if they are such good Jews and so anxious to help us. A lot of good writing will do us! Nu, am I not right?"

I left the window and returned to the table, where the wife of my old friend Reb Boruch had prepared a cup of tea for me. Sitting at the table I could yet see about half the market place, with the advantage that no one in the market place could see me.

All this time Boruch himself had been at prayer. He now shed his talith and taphillan, poured out for himself a glass of brandy and drank to my health. "May God grant us better times," he said. I envied my host, whose only need seemed to be a better livelihood.

"There must soon be better times," Boruch continued. "For there is a God in this world; and good Jews will not allow this terrible state of affairs to continue."

"It is very well to speak of God and good Jews, and I do not doubt but they can be depended on a good deal in matters of this sort, but why is it that you are just contented with doing your business, not letting an opportunity for earning extra money to go by, and yet you give none of your attention or energy to the general Jewish matters about which you are complaining?" I interrupted.

He smiled and replied, "These are matters concerning the Lord Himself."

"But good Jews are dying," I insisted. There is hunger and famine throughout the land. What are you going to do about it, Reb Boruch?"

"I shall mind my own business and see to it that the famine does not reach me or my children," he replied. "But I have faith in God. God will not allow His people to starve. However, let us discuss something else. How are the crops in your town this year?"

A GREAT EVANGEL.

George Eliot's work inspired in many Jews, not alone in England, but in far away lands, where translations of it were made available, a new spirit, or rather the old spirit renewed, which turned their eyes forward to their ancient land and its potentialities for the solving of Judaism, threatened so direly by persecution on the one hand and no less direly by assimilation on the other. We Jews can never appreciate too highly "Daniel Deronda," nor too gratefully the author of the book whose centenary the townlet in which she first saw the light is observing.—London Jewish World.

AN INTERVIEW WITH A ROUMANIAN MINISTER AND WITH A FORMER PRESIDENT.

By LEO WOLFSON.

Copyrighted by International Jewish Press Bureau, Inc.

In writing of my travels in Roumania, Bessarabia, Bukowina and Eastern Galicia, I must first record several interviews which I had with Roumanian ministers and statesmen, and then what prominent Jewish representatives told me. Afterwards, I shall picture the life of the Jews in these sections, their sufferings and their hopes.

The first Roumanian statesman whom I visited in Bucharest was Dr. Angheliescu, former Roumanian envoy at Washington. He now holds the office of minister of education. I knew him personally, because I had been one of the committee of "The American Union of Roumanian Jews" which had welcomed him on his arrival in America, and at that time he had, in a formal written statement, promised that Roumania would grant complete civil and political rights to all her Jews.

I visited him at the ministry. I sent in my card, and he immediately came out and received me most cordially. He talked with me for a few minutes, introduced me to several professors who happened to be there, and also to the chief of his cabinet. Being occupied at the time with a commission, he begged that I pardon him for not being in a position to speak longer with me, and invited me to his home for another day, where, he remarked, we would be able to talk uninterruptedly for a few hours.

On the following day in the library of Dr. Angheliescu's home we had the following talk.

"You, no doubt, know," he began, "that the Jews are now completely emancipated and that the Jewish question in Roumania is now fully solved. The law decree of May 18, 1919, gives to every one the opportunity of becoming a citizen. As you see, the country and the government have kept the promise which I also gave the Committee of Roumanian Jews when I was in Washington. It gives me great pleasure also to be in a position to say this, and I hope that you will find that it is as I say. I also wish to express to you my thanks for the help which the Roumanian Jews gave me while in America, as well as for the friendly reception which they gave me everywhere when I arrived. In the official report which I submitted to His Majesty the King, I praised very highly the Roumanian Jews of America, and that made a very favorable impression in the country. With the Jewish question settled, there remains to be done only one thing, and that according to my opinion a very important one, that is, to establish friendly relations between the Roumanians and the Jews. The two elements must get together and make every effort to understand each other. This task requires the co-operation of the Jews, which, I regret to say, they do not give. By your visit in Roumania, you can do much to help in this respect.

I wish to remark here that I went to the minister as the correspondent of the International Jewish Press Bureau—so my card read—and that I at no time made any claim or pretense at representing any Jewish organization, or even the Roumanian Jews, although I have worked in their interests for over twenty years. When Dr. Angheliescu appealed to me that I help him—and the same appeal was made to me by all the Roumanian ministers—that gave me a strategic position of the greatest importance, and one which I used to its fullest possibilities. As a newspaperman, I could merely listen to what they might have to say, and here and there put a question. As a person whom they asked for assistance, I had the opportunity of speaking fairly, of discussing, of criticizing, and also of making suggestions and conditions. I wish to state that the leaders of Roumanian Jewry were in entire agreement with me, and knew well everything which was treated of in all the discussions, and that much of the material of which I made use was supplied to me by them.

With these remarks, I return to Dr. Angheliescu's request. I stated that, although he considered the Jewish question as settled, the Jews themselves were not of the same opinion. The law decree does not emancipate all the Jews. The two months' time which the law allows the Jews in which to make out the necessary papers is insufficient, and it is a physical impossibility to carry it out. I also told him that putting off the naturalization of the Jewish soldiers until they were demobilized was inexplicable—and the fact that they were compelled to serve in the army as foreigners could not lead to a friendly spirit. I asked what he thought should be done with the tens of thousands of Jews who had lived in Roumania for decades, and were not citizens of any other country; and even if they are, must remain in Roumania, and now desire to become citizens of the country. Then I told him that the law decree, in and of itself, had only a temporary value—and that it must first be ratified by a constitutional convention. What security was he in a position to offer that the constitutional convention would ratify the law, knowing the precedents of 1864, 1879, 1914 and 1916, when Roumanian parliaments did everything possible to extricate themselves from the promises of complete emancipation which the governments had given.

Dr. Angheliescu listened to all my comments and attempted to answer them. He repeated that the question was settled; the Jewish foreigners, that is, those not born in Roumania, fall under the same category as all other foreigners. A naturalization law will be made, as in all other countries, and Jews will later be able to become citizens under that law. The two months' period will possibly be lengthened later. (Note: An extension of three months was actually given later.) Concerning the rights of the Jewish soldiers, he remarked that that too could possibly be rectified. Coming to the question of the ratification of the law decree by the Roumanian Parliament he stated that it would positively be ratified, and that the Parliament would not be able to disregard what had already been accomplished.

Permit me also to state what Roumanian officials think about the so-called Jewish equal rights, I said to Dr. Angheliescu. A few days ago a Jewish young woman made an application to the War Ministry for a position which had been advertised in the papers, and although she had documents showing that her father was a citizen according to the law decree, Mr. Zamfirescu, the chief of the department, rejected her application on the ground that the young woman was a foreigner, and that the law is not valid. This statement I confirmed by documents. I also reminded him that several bar associations have refused to recognize Jewish lawyers, on the ground that they were foreigners and that the so-called law decree is unconstitutional. He admitted that these instances were true, and that they were deplorable, but declared that the country had adopted the law and that it would positively be enforced.

I remarked that his statements could not be satisfactory if the law had to be amended according to the points which I had raised; that there was still much to be done before the question would be really settled, but that even if I did adopt his standpoint, and if the Jews were ready to do the same thing, it would still be impossible to create friendly feelings—and that I must entirely decline to take any active part, so long as 6,000 Jewish soldiers languished in prisons on invented charges, and so long as the Jewish soldiers, who were returning from prison camps, were being subjected to such disgraceful, inhuman and unjust treatment.

I detailed for him a list of heart-rending sufferings which returning Jewish soldiers were being forced to undergo—I shall write of them at length, later, but shall mention only one instance here. Several companies of Roumanian prisoners were returning, among them 12 Jews. The officer in charge ordered the Jewish soldiers to stand on a table, and that the Roumanian soldiers look at them carefully and recall which of the Jewish soldiers had not treated them in a friendly fashion while they were in prison camps, and he would immediately order his arrest and send him before a court-martial. Of course, the soldiers understood what was meant, and all the Jews were arrested. The epidemic of Jewish arrests, I remarked to the minister, has no equal in the world, and if you wish to be friends with the Jews, you must first free all the unfortunate Jewish soldiers. There is only one means by which this can be done: a general amnesty decree. If you release all these Jews, the Jews will see that your friendship is real—they will give you theirs gladly, and you will not need my help at all.

Dr. Angheliescu argued that it was not true that they had all been unjustly sentenced; but he did admit, however, that many of the penalties imposed upon the Jewish soldiers were severe. Concerning amnesty he said that he himself could make no statement, but that he would discuss the question with the other ministers and would let me know the result.

He promised to give me the opportunity of making a trip through the country, and we were on the point of parting when an old man entered the room. Dr. Angheliescu introduced him to me as Mr. Costescu (Comaneanu), a former president of the Roumanian Senate, and remarked to him that we had just had an interesting discussion about the Jews.

"You spoke concerning Jews?" Mr. Comaneanu asked, in surprise. "They are the enemies of the country." I felt as if a snake had bitten me, and I resolved to get even with him in such a way that he would remember me as long as he lived.

"Pardon me, sir," I remarked, "Permit me to say, that knowing the tragic life of the Jews in Roumania, I wonder that they are not enemies of the country. Allow me also to ask you, what you, as an important Roumanian statesman, and as a patriot, have done to secure the love of the Jews towards the country. You must, of course, remember all the laws which you helped to frame against the Jews; you know how they were oppressed at every step, and you dare speak of them as enemies of the country. I consider your work, yourself and your colleagues as the true enemies of Roumania—not the Jews." And continuing, I said to him, "Tell me one thing which you have done for Jews."

Astounded at my words he began trying to extricate himself, to answer; and said among other things that he had aided 40 Jews in obtaining their citizenship, and that they had proved themselves ungrateful. With bitter irony, looking him straight in the eye, with Dr. Angheliescu as an interested spectator, I said to him:

"You deserve, indeed, many thanks. You have given citizenship to forty Jews and left 399,960 Jews in great distress—under the worst oppression. You have helped emancipate forty rich Jews, whom you and your colleagues probably needed for your speculations; and may I ask how much they had to pay for their rights, and perhaps you also know who received it? You know it is no secret that one Jew spent 150,000 francs for just such an 'emancipation.' Dr. Angheliescu here interceded and said that such discussion would lead nowhere, and, addressing Mr. Comaneanu, said that the Jews are no enemies of Roumania, that many wrongs had been done the Jews, and that the time had come for all these things to be forgotten.

Before I left, I told Mr. Comaneanu that if he really wanted to serve his country he should give up his unjust enmity toward the Jews; try to understand them, and I am sure he would love them. As a good Christian, he should preach love instead of hatred. Mr. Comaneanu pressed my hand, and said, "Sir, in a true Christian spirit I ask your pardon. Forgive me, and we shall forgive."

"Forgiving is not enough," I answered. "You must take some positive action. You must cease oppressing Jews and through just treatment try to earn their love."

THE BLESSING.

(Translated from the Yiddish of Mordecai Katz in the Jewish Daily News.)

The Captain assembled all his soldiers and communicated to them the order from headquarters to prepare for their departure, the next morning for the front. This, indeed, was not unexpected, as a rumor to that effect had spread throughout the camp for some time previous. However, at the official announcement of the exact hour of departing, everyone began to hustle. Chaplains and field workers had, likewise, their hands full, administering counsel, offering advice and expressing good wishes to the lonely and forsaken, encouraging some and comforting others.

Israel Rosen was watching the commotion and wondering what it all meant and what the results would be. Almost alone in the world, without any friends or relatives this lonely private hesitated as to what course he should have pursued. The idea flashed through his mind to go to the Rabbi for his benediction and blessing. But then, Rosen was some kind of an atheist, and would, therefore, scorn the very notion of resorting to religion, at any time or season, irrespective of conditions and circumstances. Smiling sarcastically, he dismissed the idea of the Rabbi and the blessing, making for his hut, as if in search of some hidden object or secret treasure. Presently, he came upon a folded piece of yellow paper, which he carefully disentangled and read the following:

"My dear son. Do not forget your Jewish origin, neither forsake the ancestral inheritance, nor relinquish the God of your fathers. Some day you may need Him, much more than you do your parents, and when you do appeal to your God. His answer shall certainly prove satisfactory, including as it certainly would the consequences of parental affections. Take this as a hint from your loving and devoted father."

Pensive and gloomy, Israel Rosen looked at the paper before him. He didn't read its contents; the letters, glaring and fiery, danced before him, recalling old memories of how, when a youth at home under paternal care and maternal charge, he graduated from Heder at the age of thirteen; how he refused to continue his Hebrew studies and would not delve in religious profundities, preferring to idle away his time and indulge in sports and amusements. This state of affairs could not last very long. There was time for him, his father thought, to adapt some trade and fit himself for a vocation. But Israel, the youngest of the family, mischievous and wayward, would subscribe to none of his father's issues, having determined to emigrate to America. Being but a child, at the age of fourteen, Israel was not taken seriously, neither father nor mother paying any attention to their son's whims. But they soon realized their mistake when they found Israel, one bright morning, fully prepared and equipped for his trans-Atlantic trip, in company with a considerable number of his townspeople of all ages and stations. The mother cried, the father threatened, but it produced no effect on the youngster, who remained firm in his scheme. The parents yielded, and supplied him with phylacteries for daily use and guarding tokens throughout the perilous journeys of both the fearful ocean and the unknown land. The inscription of the Almighty on the frontlets, the father maintained, would scare the devil and drive him away from his son's courses, and the connection of Jehovah with the Tzitzith might check the assaults and attacks of brutes and villains.

Israel Rosen traveled and struggled, journeyed and suffered, worked and traded, prospered and speculated, and visited, points and places until one day he found himself in the camp of the United States army ready for embarkation. And now he missed his phylacteries, as well as his parents. Father and mother, who knows what became of them in the course of recent developments and late occurrences of torture, famine, exile and ravages, annihilating thousands and butchering tens of thousands of his kith and k'n in Eastern Europe. He yearned for his parents, and wished he could find his fringes and phylacteries. Why not go to the rabbi? He may give him phylacteries, fringes, a blessing and some advice or counsel about his parents and their fate. Nothing like trying.

There is hustle and bustle in and about the hut of the Jewish Welfare Board. Soldiers swarm the place receiving and giving messages. The rabbi, smiling and perspiring, shakes hands with one, blesses the other, whispers to the third, and has a secret mission for the fourth. Timid and confused, Rosen stands in the front, waiting for his chance, which he misses in his modesty. The rabbi, however, notices his embarrassment and approaches him with his smile and handshake. Rosen gazes blushing at the rabbi, remembering his continuous irreligious lukewarmness and is somewhat afraid to address the rabbi. The latter, intuitive and psychological, invites the soldier to his private room, points towards a chair and offers a few cheering remarks to the distressed visitor. Rosen, thereupon, regains his former spirit, tells the rabbi of his anguish on the part of his parents, asks for a set of fringes and a couple of phylacteries, confessing his guilt in disregarding to watch and use these very sacred objects after being given to him by his parents at his departure for America, a considerable number of years ago. Rosen thinks that his irreligious life might have been responsible for the severities inflicted upon his parents across the Atlantic, the disappearance of sanctified charms increasing such a belief within Rosen's mind. He thinks, therefore, that the procuring of fringes and phylacteries once again, which he solemnly promises to use every morning during prayer, may atone for past transgressions and help him in getting the proper information as to the whereabouts of his parents. As for himself, he is perfectly satisfied with any results and consequences since he, like the rest of the American boys, is fighting the good cause for universal democracy and worldly freedom, hastening the scriptural millennium and bringing about the Messianic era. At the same time the rabbi's blessing may be a source of inspiration and his benediction would certainly multiply his hopes and aspirations, and if there are any to spare, Rosen would appreciate the rabbi for his good wishes as well as for the fringes, phylacteries and cheering advice as to the location of his parents.

The rabbi granted Rosen all his wishes cheerfully and smilingly.

5679: A REVIEW.

THE outstanding event of the closing Jewish year was that it beheld the cessation of the terrible hostilities which had literally deluged the universe in blood since the high summer of 1914. The Jewish people were thankful to the Giver of all good on the conclusion of the armistic, although the condition of those of our co-religionists who lived in the path of the contending armies, as well as of those who reside in the countries gripingly affected by the great war, still cries out to heaven for amelioration. Peace has come to a war-weary world, in which Jews were great, if not the chief, sufferers. This fact alone serves to distinguish 5679 from the years which preceded it.

It is probable that the new year will see the final disposition of Palestine in accordance with the determination of the Peace Conference. Whether this will be of a nature to satisfy the demands of one set or the other of Jewish publicists remains to be determined. As this review deals with the past, with what has become a part of history, and does not attempt to sound a prophecy, we dismiss this consideration for treatment—let us hope it may be suitably—a year hence. Roumania, too, has passed a new emancipatory law to govern her Jews. Its working practicability remains to be demonstrated.

Growing out of the deliberations of the Peace Conference, and falling within the rubric of events of Jewish interest during the year 5679, was the negotiation of a new Polish treaty, to fix the rights of the several portions of the population of the new Poland. This circumstance may well stand out as the great event of the old Jewish year, for with the fortunes of Poland the lives and destinies of a vast number of our co-religionists are bound up. Poland, where Jews constitute the second largest part of the body politic of the land; Poland, which in latter years has ingloriously exhibited itself toward Jews through the media of anti-Semitic measures of repression, economic and social boycotts and, in 5679, even through pogroms; Poland and its fate is of portentous concern for all Jews, and the promulgation of a new treaty for the government of this sadly historic country holds a remarkable number of points of interest for the Jews.

The new treaty is, moreover, of direct importance for the future well-being of world-Jewry, since the well-being of Polish Jewry reacts on that of all other Jewries, and since the instrument, executed at Versailles on June 28, 1919, covers the whole duty of Polish Jewry, and of non-Jewish Poles, as citizens of the new state. Chapter I of this epoch-making document is, in truth and in effect, a bill of rights for the inhabitants of the new Poland, including the Jews within the territorial limits of the land; and a bill of rights for the Jews of Poland was hitherto something unbelievable and utopian. Hence we think it within the bounds of truth and fairness to say that this treaty, with its elaborate provisions for the enforcement and workability of the terms thereof, stands out as the great event of 5679. For, most important of all, this treaty has a sanction, in that the United States, the British Empire, the French Republic, the Kingdom of Italy and the Empire of Japan by their duly-accredited plenipotentiaries are parties, as signatories, to it.

We quote, for the complete orientation of our readers, those portions of the instrument which clearly define and strongly safeguard the rights and liberties of the Jews residing in the new Polish state. They read as follows:

Article 2.—Poland undertakes to assure full and complete protection of life and liberty to all inhabitants of Poland without distinction of birth, nationality, language, race or religion.

All inhabitants of Poland shall be entitled to the free exercise, whether public or private, of any creed, religion or belief, whose practices are not inconsistent with public order or public morals.

Article 7.—All Polish nationals shall be equal before the law and shall enjoy the same civil and political rights without distinction as to race, language or religion.

Differences of religion, creed or confession shall not prejudice any Polish national in matters relating to the enjoyment of civil or political rights, as, for instance, admission to public employments, functions and honors, of the exercise of professions and industries.

No restriction shall be imposed on the free use by any Polish national of any language in private intercourse, in commerce, in religion, in the press or in publications of any kind, or at public meetings.

Notwithstanding any establishment by the Polish Government of an official language, adequate facilities shall be given to Polish nationals or non-Polish speech for the use of their language, either orally or in writing, before the courts.

Article 11.—Jews shall not be compelled to perform any act which constitutes a violation of their Sabbath, nor shall they be placed under any disability by reason of their refusal to attend courts of law or to perform any legal business on their Sabbath. This provision, however, shall not exempt Jews from such obligations as shall be imposed upon all other Polish citizens for the necessary purposes of military service, national defense or the preservation of public order.

Poland declares her intention to refrain from ordering or permitting elections, whether general or local, to be held on a Saturday, nor will registration for electoral or other purposes be compelled to be performed on a Saturday.

This is the magna charta of Polish Jewry. Along with the newly-won liberty of Poland this declaration must receive effective realization. The year just closed will ever be memorable for both. The new-found liberty of Poland imposes new obligations on that country, harvested in the declaration concerning the Jews hereinbefore quoted. Were Poland to have successfully achieved its liberty without at the same time achieving the liberty of all the inhabitants of the land, the result were worse than abject defeat and the most crushing bondage. Poland has been made to comprehend the value and the importance of thoroughly setting its own national house in order. The inhabitants of Poland of various races and creeds are as national in the Polish sense as the Poles themselves, and so entitled to the protection of a great fundamental law.

All the foregoing objects are attained by the treaty which was consummated and promulgated in 5679. This fact alone would, as we have already stated, make this year stand out as one in which epochal progress was made for the Jewry of the world. That in this result America bore so splendid, so important a part is additional cause for rejoicing in the American Jewish community, so loyal to the great country which has now come to the dominating position of world leadership, so faithful to the sanctification of the Jewish name.

Nor must it be forgotten that a considerable share in the consummation of the Polish treaty was borne by Jews themselves. From all the lands of the entente Jewish representatives were sent to Paris, there to deliberate together, to confer with the plenipotentiaries at the Peace Conference, to advise on the steps to be taken to safeguard the civil, political and religious rights of minorities and to bring order out of the chaotic welter of affairs in Eastern Europe. All this has now been rendered effective, and these devoted servants of the community, headed (as seems most fitting in view of the American hegemony) by the American Jewish representatives, are entitled to the grateful thanks of the Jews throughout the world. These words of appreciation belong in this historical record of a memorable Jewish year, which, at its close, finds Jewry looking forward with high hopes and cheerful confidence to the future.

May 5680 be all you wish it to be for you!

A happy and prosperous New Year to all our readers!

May each one of the House of Israel be inscribed in the Book of Life for a good year!

Tomorrow is the Sabbath of Repentance, the intermediate holy time between the two greatest of the solemn seasons of the Jewish year. This Sabbath should be as completely and as prayerfully observed as the great "terrible days" which immediately precede and follow it.

Thirty years ago or so, when Manhattan Beach L. I., was one of our fashionable summer resorts, Jews were not admitted as guests at its hotels. Manhattan Beach has lately been developed into an all-year-round residence section and now we learn that a Jewish congregation has been organized there. Shades of Austin Corbin!

Let us make the most of the new year. That is to say, let us intensify our Jewishness during 5680. Let the new year be the time when we live true Jewish lives, when we sustain all the deathless traditions of our great past, when we act in all our dealings faithfully and honorably as Jews. But not for the new year alone should we inscribe these ideals on our personal banners. They should exalt us and vivify us throughout all the future years of our lives to the glory of Judaism and the honor of our own careers.

The new year finds the world at peace. May this be the peace which shall never be broken. May this peace cover all sections of the Jewish world, one with the other, and make all of us stand together solidly for the things which unite us. The differences which separate Jew from Jew should be forgotten. There is plenty of constructive work within Jewry for all of us to do. This work is for the benefit of the human race in general and not merely for our own edification and aggrandizement. Religiously, the new year should mark the beginning of a new era in modern Jewish affairs. We should pledge anew our allegiance to the faith of our fathers, for whose sake they suffered so much and so intensely. These thoughts should inform all our actions throughout the new year and all the years to come.

THE VALLEY OF DECISION.

המונים המונים בעמק החיץ כי קרוב יום ד' בעמק החיץ

"Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision: for the day of the Lord is near in the valley of decision." (Joel, iv, 14.)

A GREY twilight. A twilight that seems to bear in its hidden heart more of the memories of the night than of the hopes of the morning. Slowly it encroaches upon the dark curtain of the sky—almost reluctantly, as though it lacked the mighty pulse that drives the blood of the world through the veins of Infinite Life. Its hesitant path, as it climbs unwillingly upward, is scarcely lit up by a timid rosy tint, a feeble dawn flush. A strange dayspring.

I have seen many a dayspring leaping like a swift hind upon the peaks of the hills, electric with the hopes of new births, dynamic with the vital urge of new being. I have seen the bounding blood of the world showing through the delicate complexion of the dawn, and spreading red through the blue veins of the heavens within the outstretched arms of the tingling and kindling East. But I have seen daybreaks of this other kind, too: of the wavering kind—the very picture of Indecision. As though Life hung for the moment trembling over the edge of a precipice, doubting if it should go on with its millennial routine, which passes wearily from painful births to agonising deaths: without end, without seeming purpose.

Only the morning-star shines valiantly above this grey, lackadaisical twilight. As though all the hope of the world were concentrated in its fading light. As though the vast wisdom of eternity shone heroically in its evanescent depth. As though it were an all-knowing Eye, bright and brave with pity not only, but with prophetic assurance. Oh, brilliant star of sacrifice which, born of the night, immolates itself gladly upon the altar of the rising morn: O, faithful watchman of heaven lingering on the celestial ramparts to the very last; O, guardian spirit of all who through grey twilights of doubt would struggle up to high affirmation: I have known thee, brother-star, and I know thee now as twinned to my heart! In thy self-sacrifice lies the eternal confidence of a million dawns, in it the last truth of unchanging change, in it the meaning of the interminable movement that comes full circle through pain and gladness, through tears and smiles answering each other, world without end.

The grey twilight is wrong, and the valiant morning-star is right, for soon beneath the wavering skies is discovered the Valley of Decision, where teeming warlike masses are astir with preparations for the coming day, for the coming battle: God's day and God's warfare. The fever of those who feel the relentless approach of fate is in the air, eyes and swords vie with each other in gleaming fitfully: but steel is in the spears and steel is in the spirits, and an iron resolve seems to defy the uncertain light from above, while answering to the steely glint of the morning-star.

"Multitudes, multitudes in the Valley of Decision, for the Day of the Lord is near in the Valley of Decision!"

From the beginning of creation these battling hosts have stood here, in this fateful valley. These are no flesh-and-blood armies. A ghostly throng this, embattled in dense array. The light of their eyes and the glimmer of their swords are but manifest to the spiritual vision. The shout and the din of the battle, the cries of triumph and defeat, are but perceived by the inner ear of the soul. This invisible war is behind all visible wars fought by men, whether in the council-house of national parliaments, or the charnel-house of universal armed conflict. It is the only war. Here are engaged all that are not of dust: the passions and pains of men, their appetites and aspirations; and here is found the type of all that exalts and debases the mortal heart. Here ideals are the weapons, and here is the death struggle of conflicting spiritual forces. Every day the battle is renewed; every day is the Day of the Lord: nor will the battle ever cease, until God calls it off.

Behold the ghostly throng in the Valley of Decision. Here is the true No-man's Land: the waste country of wiry obstacles and of lost paths that criss-cross in bewildering fashion. Here is the ultimate desolation of abandoned hopes, here the place of defeated dreams. Here is the fierce fire of almost certain death, and here the pathetic heroism of those who over fallen corpses would find their way back to the habitations of the living. But there is no easy road issuing from this Valley. All the roads lie across the surrounding hills. All the roads lead upwards. And the heroic heart alone, hoping against hope, knows the secret of the maze of these upward winding mountain paths.

Heart of mine! Art thou not the Valley of Decision? Have not all the dream-waifs of the world, all the abandoned babes of hope, taken refuge in thee, to fight their unsupported fight against fearful odds? Heart of mine—art thou not the Ultimate Battlefield?

The Day of the Lord. The grey twilight of Rosh-Hashanah, 5680, climbing in uncertain fashion up the dark vault. And beneath—the Valley of Decision, with its ghostly throng of confused ideals. The issues of life more than ever labyrinthine. Yet a tremendous resolution burst from the heart of life, to settle once for all the pending problem of human living. The memories of the night almost obscure the hopes of the dawn, yet the shout of the vanguard is heard from the mountain-tops: "Now or never!"

The vanguard has fallen. The morning-star is dead. But presently her dying light is re-born in the shining eye of the New Day.

JOEL BLAU.

THE JEWS AND THE WAR.

The new issue of the American Jewish Year Book for the year 1919-1920, which has just been published by the Jewish Publication Society of America, is of unusual interest. It has been edited by Mr. Harry Schneiderman, secretary of the American Jewish Committee, whose many years of experience with previous issues of the Year Book have rendered him eminently fit for the task. The event of supreme importance in the year 1919 was the conclusion of the greatest war in history. It was therefore considered urgent to record the salient facts respecting the participation of the Jews of various countries in the struggle.

France.

The first article deals with the "Participation of the Jews of France in the Great War." This article, covering nearly seventy pages, was written by Captain Sylvian Halff, of the French Army, who exhibits an intimate knowledge of facts and gives a graphic and vivid description of the Jewish share in the victory. Captain Halff draws attention to the interesting fact that in July, 1914, a few days before the declaration of war, there took place a final examination at the Ecole Polytechnique, the great national institution which gives to France its best engineers and its most distinguished artillery officers. The first three on the list of successful candidates were Jews. This is a striking indication of the zeal and capacity of the Jews in the defense of their fatherland. The Jewish population of France is estimated to be 70,000, of which the native element is approximately 40,000. It is remarkable that during the war there were not less than eight Jewish generals who were given very important commands in the various branches of the army, and practically all of them were cited and received the highest honors. There were numerous colonels, captains, lieutenants, who distinguished themselves in the posts to which they were assigned. In the aviation corps a number of Jews rendered yeoman service, many of them being cited as models of personal bravery and intelligence. Captain Halff observes that the three elements of French Jewry, natives, Algerians, and immigrants from Russia and Roumania, have equally contributed to the success of the French army.

British Empire.

The story of British Jewry in the War is told by the Rev. Michael Adler, D. D., the Jewish senior chaplain, who was in France from the beginning of the war. The Jewish population of Great Britain is over 400,000. The Jews who were in active service before conscription came into force amounted to about 10,000, of whom 1,140 were officers. In Australia, for example, out of a total Jewish population of 19,000, there were 1,000 enlistments and 250 deaths in action. From the well-known Jews' Free School, in the East End of London, 1,200 former pupils joined. As far as existing records testify, some 50,000 Jews, from the beginning to the end of the war, were in one or another branch of the British service. The casualties, as known up to date of this article number:

Officers fallen in action or died in service	316
Non-commissioned officers and men	2,008
Wounded and missing	6,350
Total	8,674

Five Jews were the recipients of the Victoria Cross, one of the highest distinctions conferred upon soldiers. In the British forces the Jewish officer who reached the highest rank was Lieutenant General Sir John Monash, who landed in Egypt as a colonel, in 1914. Before the war he had been an engineer, and served as an officer in the Australian military forces. Subsequently he took part in the operations in the Dardanelles, arriving in France as a brigadier-general, in 1916, was given command of and trained the Third Australian Division in England as a major-general, and accompanied his division to France. He achieved renown for his work in the battle of Messines in June, 1917, and in April, 1918, he was promoted to rank of lieutenant general and placed in command of the Australian forces on the western front. He led his men from victory to victory in the days from August 8, when the Hindenburg line was broken, until the close of the war, receiving many distinctions, both from the British and foreign armies, for his successful leadership. Another Jewish officer to reach the rank of general in the British army was Brigadier General H. J. Selligman, D. S. O., who was a regular officer attached to the Royal Artillery and went through the war from beginning to end. The distinguished artist, Solomon J. Solomon, was specially commissioned to supervise the work of camouflage and in this capacity rendered unique service.

On sea the British Jews bore their full share in the operations in every quarter of the globe. They have been known to serve in every action of importance and in every kind of vessel afloat and under the sea. In the famous naval operation for the blocking of Zeebrugge and Ostend, which took place in the spring of 1918, Jewish officers took a part, and Lieutenant Commander R. Saunders was one of the seven officers who obtained the D. S. O. in recognition of gallantry on that occasion. In the battle of Jutland a Jewish warrant officer was yeoman of signals on board the admiral's flagship. In the landing of the Dardanelles, Admiral de Robeck, in the course of his despatch describing the stirring fights at Gallipoli, recommended for gallant service in action, Lewis Jacobs, a Jewish sailor from the east end of London. The admiral reported that "Jacobs took his boat into V Beach unaided after all the remainder of the crew and the troops were killed or wounded. When last seen Jacobs was standing and endeavoring to pole the cutter to the shore. Whilst thus employed he was killed." Major Adler also gives a selected list of citations and honors.

Jewish Units and Palestine.

Mr. Joshua H. Naumann contributes an article on the Jewish battalions and the Palestine campaign. He describes the organization of special Jewish units who contributed, above proportion to their numbers, to the success of Allenby in his conquest of Palestine.

United States.

The task of describing the part played by the Jews of America in the world war is at present very arduous because the records are not yet complete. The American Jewish Committee, together with the Jewish Welfare Board and other Jewish organizations, is collecting material relating to the Jews in various branches of the American army. In spite of the wealth of material available, the time has not yet arrived for an adequate, or even preliminary, historical survey of the contribution of the American Jews to the winning of the war. All American war records are as yet far behind those of the other nations who had a longer period in which to organize their historical material. When this material is completed the records will occupy several volumes which will be published in the course of time. In the present essay Mr. Julian Leavitt, director of the office of war records of the American Jewish Committee, has limited himself to a consideration of certain statistical data of immediate interest. Mr. Leavitt states that the records thus far show 150,000 Jews in the military and naval forces of the United States, and he assumes that on the basis of certain calculations the total number of Jews will be found to reach about 250,000. Of the 140,000 individual records some 114,000 are classified in the army, 13,500 in the navy, 2,200 in the Marine Corps and about 11,000 in miscellaneous branches of the service. Of the 114,000 army records, 24,200 are known to be in the infantry, 7,642 in the artillery, 7,884 in the medical corps, 4,558 in the signal and aviation corps, 2,496 in the engineer corps, 1,239 in the cavalry, 1,385 in ordnance, and 13,264 in other branches. Of the 51,332 remaining, Mr. Leavitt assumes the great majority will probably be found later in the infantry. As to rank, there are thus far recorded 7,929 Jewish commissioned officers in the army, of whom 132 are colonels, 39 lieutenant-colonels, 340 majors, 1,201 captains and 4,802 lieutenants. In the navy there are recorded to date 433 commissioned officers, including one rear admiral, and in the marine corps 59 commissioned officers, including one brigadier-general. In the short period that America was engaged in fighting the Jews received numerous distinctions and honors. Of such citations there are recorded some 600 to the credit of American Jews, of which 378 were conferred by the American command and the remainder by allied commands. Of the rare Congressional Medal of Honor, the highest distinction awarded by the United States, the Jews have at least three to their credit.

The Peace Conference.

In the two treaties which have already been published, namely, those with Germany and Poland, there are paragraphs which concern the fate of Jews. The signing of the treaties is one of the most important events in modern history, and accordingly the current Year Book contains an article entitled, "The Peace Conference and Rights of Minorities," which prints paragraphs excerpted from various documents emanating from the Peace Conference.

The Jewish Position in Lithuania.

(From the London Zionist Bulletin.)
M. Soloweitschik, the Jewish Minister in the Lithuanian Government, has made the following statement on the Jewish situation in Lithuania. The Jews, he said, had for a long time fought hand-in-hand with the Lithuanian democracy for the liberation of all the nationalists included in the former Russian Empire. The war and the great expulsions of Jews from Lithuania had interrupted the political activities of the Jews. Their leaders were taken from them, and for a time the Jews seemed entirely absorbed in the details of their daily lives. At first, after the period of occupation came to an end, they could give no support to the reconstruction of the State of Lithuania, but during recent months the Jewish population had again become active in politics. The Jews believed that the historical traditions and the social and economic structure of Lithuania would create circumstances such as from the start would favor their living in the state, not as foreigners, but as those bound by the living ties of a common citizenship to their homes. These ties must, of course, be gradually formed through the repealing of all special laws affecting the Jews which survived from the Russian regime, and through the newly awakened feeling for justice among the Jewish masses and the corresponding feeling on the part of the Lithuanian masses; but he could at once report that the equality proclaimed by the government had had a certain influence on the feelings of the Jews.

Unfortunately, he added, the process of reconciliation was meeting with obstinate opposition from anti-Semitic agitators, who worked among the "dark" and hostile classes of the population. The destruction brought about by the war and the reactionary influences of the Tzarist regime created a favorable soil for this agitation. In the present scarcity all trade had an appearance of speculation, and the Jews were accused of producing the present high prices. While, with all other citizens, the Jews demanded that the most energetic steps should be taken to suppress excessive prices, they could only consider the identification of Jews with speculators as a new form of the everlasting slandering of Jews. The agitator took an even more threatening attitude, and unfortunately was not sufficiently opposed to all the agents of the government. The government must oppose all that divided the Jews from the other inhabitants of the country, while the Jews must strive for a community of culture with their fellow citizens.

Strong Opposition to the Jewish Occupation of Palestine.

London. (By I. J. P. B.)—Energetic measures are being adopted by the Mohammedans and the Christians in Palestine in their efforts to prevent the Jews from becoming the ruling powers there. The Palestinian correspondent of the London Times reports that the anti-Jewish forces are uniting to oppose the Jewish occupation of the country, and that they have pledged themselves not to sell any land to the Jews.

The only possible way by which a Jewish state can be established in Palestine without great bloodshed, according to the Times correspondent, is with the strong military support of England. As the situation now stands, the Christians would prefer to see the Holy Land in the hands of the Mohammedans rather than have it become the home land of the Jews.

Contending that this attitude is to be deplored, the correspondent goes on to say that in his opinion the demands of the Zionists are moderate, and that there is no reason for this opposition on the part of the Mohammedans or the Christians.

The Jewish Literary Society and the Young Men's Hebrew Association of Galveston, Texas, have voted to consolidate.

Congregation Ohave Shalom at Unionport, Pa., is proceeding with the erection of a new synagogue. The cornerstone was laid last month.

In view of the coming election campaign in Hungary, a party styled "Help Hungary" has been formed, and has issued an anti-Jewish program.

A new infirm ward and a synagogue, attached to the Hebrew Sheltering Home for the Aged at Los Angeles, Calif., were dedicated last Sunday afternoon.

Rabbi Michael Lichtenstein, of Congregation Ahavas Chesed, Mobile, Ala., has been invited to become the spiritual leader of K. K. Baith Abraham of Dayton, Ohio.

Rabbi William H. Fineschreiber, of Congregation Children of Israel, Memphis, Tenn., has declined the call tendered him by Congregation Shaare Emeth of St. Louis, Mo.

The suggestion that Jewish soldiers in the Polish army be granted furloughs for the holy days, which was offered by the Jewish deputies in Parliament, has been accepted by the government.

Rabbi Edward L. Israel has been installed as minister of Temple B'rith Shalom of Springfield, Ill., succeeding Rabbi I. Mortimer Bloom, who has assumed a New York pulpit.

The title of professor has been conferred by the German Minister of Education on Dr. E. Baneth, the eminent Mishnaic authority, and Dr. I. Ellbogen, the well-known historical writer.

Mayor Miles B. Litts and many noted civilians and clergymen of Erie, Pa., participated in the ceremonies incident to the dedication of the new synagogue of Congregation El Jacob on September 7.

Julius Rosenwald, of Chicago, has offered six scholarships of $1,200 each for Negro graduates of American medical schools who desire to take post-graduate work in pathology, bacteriology, physiology, pharmacology or physiological chemistry.

Rabbi Perlmutter, the celebrated Jewish leader in Poland and member of the Polish parliament, will soon be in this country. His object is to aid in the collection of funds for the rehabilitation of European Jewry.

General Pugliese, of the Italian army, has been appointed officer of the Military Order of Savoy. He greatly distinguished himself in the late war, and in two years rose from the rank of captain to that of major-general.

At the election, held in Philadelphia, Pa., last week, Henry W. Braude was successful in the democratic primaries for the office of recorder of deeds. Simon Walter in the 5th district and Sigmund J. Gans in the 6th district captured councilmanic nominations.

Dr. John Van Lear, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, of Little Rock, Ark., will be one of the many non-Jewish speakers who will tour Colorado in the interests of that State's share of the American Jewish War Relief Committee's $35,000,000 fund.

Mr. Isaac H. Boas, an experimental chemist, of Perth Technical College, has been sent on a world tour by the Advisory Council of the Australian Federal Institute of Science and Industry to visit every notable laboratory of forest products, and to report to the council on his return.

The new Grand Rabbi of France, M. Israel Levi, and M. Hendle, Departmental Director at the Ministry of the Interior, have been appointed members of the Special Commission which has to deal with reparations for damage done to civil and religious edifices in France by acts of war.

The Polish police mistook for Bolsheviks a party of twenty Chassidim who were praying at midnight on a Saturday in the house of the Tsadick of Kozenitz. All were arrested, but were subsequently released. The police, however, instituted proceedings against the Chassidim for holding an illegal meeting.

As the result of the representations of the Jewish deputies to the Polish minister of war, concerning the desecration of the Jewish burial ground at Lodz by soldiers, the minister issued an order prohibiting the soldiers from using the ground as pasture for their horses and from interfering with funerals.

A new variation of the blood accusation charges has been brought up in Warsaw against a young Jewish woman, Leah Rosenfarb, who is being tried for an alleged attempt to poison a Christian girl. The defendant denies the charges, but the anti-Semites have determined to make a strong case of the trial, which promises to be sensational.

Under the will of the late Mr. Julius Jones, of Birmingham, Eng., who died in 1918, his estate was left to fifteen hospitals and similar institutions. Of the total of over £100,000, the sum of £60,000 was distributed in May last, and there is now a further sum of £15,000 available for distribution among these local institutions.

Rabbi David Alexander of Collingwood Temple, Toledo's largest Hebrew congregation, has accepted a call from the Akron, Ohio, Hebrew congregation and will take up his charge within the next two months. Rabbi Alexander has been in Toledo for 14 years. He has been active in congregational and civic affairs of that city.

Declaring that the Jews are profiteers and that it is in the interest of the country to kill every Jew in it, the Czechs in the Karwin mining district of Bohemia have issued a proclamation advising the inhabitants to kill all the Polish Jews in that region. Plundering, the proclamation says, is not enough; not a single Jew must be left alive there.

Miss Joan Lazarus has been admitted to the Bar of Victoria, and is the first Australian Jewess to receive this distinction. Miss Lazarus comes from a legal family, as her great grandfather and grandfather were well known English barristers. Miss Lazarus is actively engaged in practice in partnership with her father, Mr. Mark Lazarus, a well-known Melbourne barrister.

The Polish Parliament rejected by 150 votes against 111 a motion by M. Grunbaum, inviting the government immediately to introduce a bill into the House, facilitating the grant of Polish citizenship, and to annul the orders for the expulsion of aliens. The House also rejected a motion for the immediate removal of the old Tsarist restrictions against Jews in the Bielestock district.

At Slupianova (near Kielce), Poland, last month, peasants attacked the synagogue and destroyed the whole of the interior. All prayer-books were torn up, but by some miracle the Scrolls of the Law escaped the notice of the rioters and were saved. Jews were also attacked at Lukov by riotous soldiers. Many Jews were beaten, and a number of our coreligionists had their beards cut or torn off.

As a result of the decision of the students of the Budapest Polytechnic to continue to disturb the normal courses of the institution until the expulsion of their Jewish colleagues was secured, the rector requested the latter to leave the Polytechnic. The Jewish professors, however, declined to deliver lectures in such circumstances, and decided to boycott the Polytechnic until the return of the Jewish students is arranged for.

Capt. Jacob A. Harzfeld, formerly city counselor of Kansas City, Mo., who has been with the military intelligence division of the general staff and acting as one of the military attaches at Archangel, has returned to this country. For his services he was decorated with the Order of St. Stanislaw by the all-Russian Government for his valuable services with the Allied forces in Northern Russia.

The entire anti-Jewish press is severely criticizing the Polish government for its decision to establish forty courts-martial to deal with the rioters. The measure is regarded as a concession to the Jews and as a blow to Polish prestige. The Dwa Grosze predicts that the step will incite the Christian Poles to more serious excesses. The Warsaw Gazette asserts that the measure will have no effect on the rioters.

Mr. Joseph Marks, J. P., died recently at his residence in Sydney, Australia, at the age of eighty-four. Mr. Marks was born in London, arrived in Sydney in 1854, and first settled at West Maitland, where he carried on business for some years. He was one of the founders and the first treasurer of the West Maitland Synagogue. In the eighties he moved to Sydney, and was engaged in the wool and produce business for over forty years, being one of, if not the, oldest buyers in the trade. His knowledge of wool and produce was availed of by the government, who appointed him a commissioner of the Melbourne International and Chicago Exhibitions. He was also on the Citizens' Committee which organized the receptions and dinner to the present King when he visited Sydney.

Some thousands of Jews and non-Jews who have been arrested and deported from Galicia without having been informed of the reason are being interned in Strzalkow. Their condition is extremely serious, for they are starving. They are half-naked and without any footwear. Eight hundred are dangerously ill in hospital; the patients lie on straw sacks and are not receiving proper medical attention.

The commanding officer of the new Polish regiment which recently entered Sedlitz has received the grateful thanks of the Jews of the city for having taken effective measures which forestalled and prevented threatened anti-Semitic demonstrations on the part of his soldiers. After discovering the beginning of an agitation among his men which would very likely have led to serious results, the commander took immediate steps to let it be known that no disturbances of such a nature would be countenanced.

Deputy Farbstein secured an important concession at the Polish Ministry of Education, where he was promised that a circular would be issued very shortly, releasing Jewish pupils in schools from writing and drawing on Saturdays. According to the proposed circular these pupils will only be required to attend the lessons on Saturdays. Deputy Farbstein was also informed that the entire question of permitting Jewish pupils to absent themselves from educational institutions on Saturdays and Jewish Holy Days would be considered by the Cabinet.

NEWS FROM ENGLAND.

Earl Grey to Be British Ambassador Instead of Lord Reading, but Appointment All the Same Indorsed by Jewish Community—The Accident to "Mr. Jimmy" Rothschild—More About the Leon Levison Misapplied Knighthood—Dr. Weizmann and Israel Zangwill on Palestine Problems—Jewish Boys Conclude Big Series of Camp Vacations—London Russian Newspapers' Debt to Russian Jewish Contributors—Commercial Writer on Economic Conditions in Palestine.

London, Aug. 22, 1919.

After all, Lord Reading is not to be British Ambassador to Washington. Still the community here welcomes the appointment of Viscount Grey. They value his high-mindedness and lofty regard for the principles of justice in the mutual relations and dealings with peoples. The good work begun by Lord Reading, it is fully believed, will now be continued, and every one here also is delighted with the fact that Sir William Tyrrell remains as chief of the Embassy staff.

The sad accident to Baron James de Rothschild, better known in this country as Mr. Jimmy Rothschild, and recognized as a great sport, has aroused universal regret. It will be remembered that he has lost his eye through the shattering of the monocle he was wearing. He is the eldest son of Baron Edmond de Rothschild and is well known on the turf both in England and France. Furthermore, he is an ardent Zionist and was recently in Palestine working under Dr. Weizmann. Like most of the Rothschilds he is an art collector, and, for himself, has written a book on the Elizabethan period as depicted by Shakespeare. His wife was formerly Dorothy Pinto, daughter of Eugene Pinto.

The bestowal nominally by the King of a knighthood on Leon Levison is still arousing intense disgust both in the Jewish community here and in non-Jewish quarters. A number of important British weekly newspapers of standing have joined in asking the question as to why this knighthood was bestowed upon a recreant and pervert and, above all, upon one whose financial manipulation of alleged Russian Jewish relief funds has been severely animadverted upon.

Dr. Weizmann made a stirring speech at the last meeting of the council of the English Zionist Federation, dealing with the present position of the movement. It cannot be said that Dr. Weizmann's note was an optimistic one. He is only too fully aware of the immense load of complications that have to be overcome before Jewish nationalism can triumph, and evidently he is in no mood to disparage or underestimate these difficulties. He reminded his hearers that at the present time there are 600,000 Arabs as against 60,000 Jews in Palestine, a matter that makes the position of the British administration very difficult. However, he is positive that all the conditions for the creation of a true Jewish state are available in Palestine. He made certain suggestions. First of all, Palestine must not form part of Syria and Egypt, but have its own self-contained boundaries. He declared categorically again that this condition would be fulfilled. Another necessity was that the country should be capable of accommodating a large number of Jews in a reasonable time. He thought that the land could absorb a great number of Jews provided the land were freed. He explained the conditions under which vast tracts of land in Palestine though nominally owned were not cultivated, and legislation would be necessary to liberate the soil, always preserving the rights of the Arabs. The Jewish organization to be set up in Palestine would have the first refusal of public works, and this would enable them not only to employ large numbers of Jews in their construction, but also to retain them as national property. For every person settled on the land there could be two in the towns, and capital was necessary to develop industrial enterprise. He again urged the necessity of caution in regard to emigration. If the land was swamped it would lead to a disaster which would ruin all their hopes, and they dared not court failure. The British Government was going to give them a chance, and it was for them to make the best of it and to make the Jewish national home a reality.

The Indian Review for June last printed an interview dealing with the future of Palestine which Nihal Singh had with Israel Zangwill. Zangwill's plan for settling the much vexed question of the custody of the sacred places appears to be that "the Hebrew converts to Islam should be put in charge of the Muslim shrines, whereas the Christian holy places should be entrusted to the Hebrew converts to Christianity." Commenting on this suggestion, the interviewer says: "When the Jewish hatred for the apostate is remembered, this suggestion coming from a son of Israel appears most remarkable." Zangwill made it clear to the interviewer that he had no patience with men who were bent merely upon imperialist-jingoist enterprises. He would not have a camouflaged Jewish state, and, as to the governorship, he asked: "If a Hebrew—the Honorable E. S. Montagu—could be found to govern, from Whitehall, London, so large and populous a country as India, why could not a Hebrew be found capable of being the supreme head of Jewish Palestine?"

A great number of Jewish boys have again been spending their vacation this year in holiday camps. Members of the provincial Jewish Lads' Brigades have had their camp in North Wales and a great time was spent not only in the ordinary vacation pursuits but in special physical, Zouave, and military drill and camp sports. Most of the boys from these various camps are now back in their homes again and look splendidly vigorous and fit as a result of their open air holiday. Generally it may be said that the interest in open air life and athletics amongst Jewish youth is increasing rapidly every year, and whilst there are certain numbers who still find their pleasures in the close, fetid atmosphere of billiard rooms and gambling halls, a greatly increased number now interest themselves perpetually in manly sports and athletic pastimes.

There are now somewhere about half a dozen small weekly newspapers in London devoted to Russia. They are financed and run by committees and organizations having as their object the return of Russia to sane governmental methods and society organization. By far the most vigorous contributors to these journals in London are Russian Jews, and it can be said beyond all doubt that were it not for the efforts of these men (and sometimes there are women amongst them) the special Russian press in London would be but a poor anaemic thing.

A trade correspondent of the London Times recently dealt with commercial conditions in so far as they related to the Palestine market. He pointed out that in Palestine up to the time of the outbreak of war, British trade was flourishing and was ahead of all competitors. The goods which will be in demand, as soon as trade can be resumed without hindrance, are provisions, textiles, and clothing, and building materials of all kinds, including timber, iron bars and girders, tiles and bricks, and hardware, as well as paint and linseed oil.

Before the war large quantities of flour were imported from Odessa, Rumania, and other foreign sources. The Hauran district of Syria, south of Damascus, was capable of supplying the grain requirements of Palestine, but owing to difficulties of transport this source of supply was not properly used. Provisions were imported from England. The normal requirements of Palestine of this description include margarine and vegetable butter, herrings, sardines, cocoa and chocolate, cheese and sugar.

At the time of the outbreak of war building operations were becoming quite extensive, public buildings were in course of erection at Jerusalem, and there was a very good demand for constructional ironwork, hardware and ironmongery. German firms were supplying these goods at low prices and on long credit terms. At the present moment such materials are practically unobtainable in the country, and a fine opportunity is offered to those who can get first in the field. Manufacturers of agricultural implements and machinery have already had their attention directed to the future possibilities of this market. Of longcloth and ready-made clothing, for which there is usually a good market, stocks may be said to be non-existent. Goods of the superior kinds were supplied by the United Kingdom, but a larger proportion of the trade was done by Austria. Linen and cotton cloth, hosiery, haberdashery and silks, boots, shoes, and leather goods were formerly supplied mainly by the United Kingdom, and as the export of produce is resumed the demand for these and other necessary goods in exchange should be very favorable.

Anti-Jewish Agitation in Warsaw.

Warsaw (By I. J. P. B.).—Two Jews, named Zlatnitski and Skrabek, were brutally beaten here by a mob which had been incited against the Jews by the inflammatory addresses of several Polish deputies. Zlatnitski was arrested also, but was later freed.

In their speeches, the deputies declared that the Jews had forced Poland to sign the treaty containing the objectionable minority rights clause, and argued that the grain trade ought to be taken out of the hands of the Jews.

Anti-Semitism Still Rife in Germany.

Berlin (By I. J. P. B.).—Anti-Semitic feeling still runs high all through the country, and continues to find an outlet in calling for the annihilation of the Jewish population. The propagandists are not content with arousing hatred against the Jews, but urge the adoption of the Polish methods of solving the Jewish problem. Vorwaerts, the Socialistic paper, has appealed to the government to take energetic measures to suppress the pogrom agitation.

OUR OWN

A CRY ACROSS THE ATLANTIC. Written Especially for the Central Committee for the Relief of Suffering Jews by ISRAEL ZANGWILL.

Jews of the great Republic,
Clasped to her mother-breast,
Nestling so warm and peaceful
Within that bosom blest,
Turn to our tortured Europe,
Hark to the myriad moan
Of pinched lips, white with hunger,
That stiffen as they groan,
And remember in these wan creatures
Runs the blood that is your own.

Their sirens and yours together
Bore ceaseless years of scorn;
With quenchless faith in marshfires
They followed after morn.
They built their house on quicksand,
Or the red volcano's cone,
And every age beheld it
Engulfed or overthrown,
For never in all the ages did a home
Remain their own.

By devastated dwellings,
By desecrated fanes,
By hearth-stones, cold and crimsoned,
And slaughter-reeking lanes,
Again is the Hebrew quarter
Through half of Europe known;
And crouching in the shambles,
Rachel, the ancient crone,
Weeps again for her children and the Fate that is her own.

No laughter rings in these ruins
Save of girls to madness shamed.
Their mothers disemboweled
Lie stark 'mid children maimed.
The Shool has a great congregation
But never a psalm they drone,
Shrouded in red-striped Tallisim,
Levi huddles with Kohn;
But the blood from their bodies oozing
Is the blood that is your own.

Shot, some six to a bullet,
Lashed and trailed in the dust,
Mutilated with hatchets
In superbestial lust—
No beast can even imagine
What some men do or condone—
Surely these bear our burden
And for our sins atone,
And if we hide our faces, then the guilt
Is as our own.

Laden with babes and bundles,
Footsore on every road,
Their weary remnants wander,
With bayonets for goad,
They cry: Shmaa Yisroel
In tragic monotone,
And if ye, Israel, hear not,
By whom shall truth be shown?
For the strength whereby God saves us
Is the strength that is our own.

Alas! for the wizened infants,
Sucking at stone-dry breasts.
Alas! for the babies writhing
In the grip of plagues and pests.
They are fever-stricken and famished,
They are rotten of skin and bone,
Yet their mothers must die and leave
Them
To suffer and starve alone.
And any one of these children might be
Your very own.

Barefoot, ragged and staring
Like walkers in their sleep,
Feeding on bark or sawdust,
The doomed processions creep;
Crawling through marsh or snowdrift
Or forest overgrown,
They bear on high their Torah
Like a flag to heaven flown;
They prove how great their spirit, let Us prove how great our own.

At last but a naked rabble,
Clawing the dust for bread,
Jabbering, walling, whining,
Hordes of the living dead,
Half apes, half ghosts, they grovel,
Nor human is their tone,
Yet they are not brutes but brethren,
These wrecks of the hunger-zone,
And their death-cry rings to heaven in
The tongue that is your own.

Jews of the great Republic
Who gave your sons to death,
That Peace be born in Europe
And Justice draw new breath,
Will ye still endure to witness
As of yore your kindred thrown
To races whose souls are savage,
To tribes whose hearts are stone,
Compared with the love and mercy that
For ages have warmed our own?

Set your lips to the Shofar,
Waken a fiery blast.
Shrill to the heathen nations—
This slaughter shall be the last!
And send our old Peace-greeting
Peeling from cot to throne,
Till mankind heeds the message
On the Hebrew trumpet blown,
And the faith of the whole world's peoples
Is the faith that is our own.

WARBURG.—To the Jews of America: After five years of blind groping into the mist, out of which came to us the voices of our brethren in all the wretched lands pleading for help from America, there comes now definite news of their sad straits from which we can learn of the task that is before us.

What we, the Jews of America, have done during the last five years has been summed up into one sentence by a rabbi who said to one of our delegates in Europe: "Tell the Jews of America that they are running a race with the Angel of Death. If they send money enough they will win. If they fail us, the cemetery wins." Nothing more graphic of what we have done and what we still have to do, can be said.

We have saved hundreds of thousands of lives. Speaking for you all, may I not say to them when I meet their representatives abroad: "We will not fail you know. We will again place ourselves before our holy altars, to deserve the blessings that the Almighty has showered upon us in this favored land of ours. We will do all that is humanly possible to re-establish Israel everywhere; so that it may lead a fuller, more secure and more contented life, to transmit to generations yet unborn the heritage of Mercy, Truth, and Love for all mankind, that was bequeathed by our ancestors to us."

May the prayers of a united Israel be heard on High, and may the Almighty in His infinite goodness vouchsafe unto us and to all Israel His priceless blessing of Peace.—Felix M. Warburg, Chairman Joint Distribution Committee.

The Merrow Machine Company Publishes a New Catalog.

For many years we have noted the steady and healthy growth of the Merrow Machine Company, Hartford, Conn., whose high speed, overseaming, over- edging and shell stitch machines are in daily use in practically all knitting and hosiery mills, and in the cutting up trade in this country and extensively abroad. We have known the principals for generations and are pleased to see the younger generation taking hold of the industry with the same enthusiasm and persistence as those who have preceded.

We have a number of times had the pleasure of visiting their very up-to-date plant, the last word in manufacturing and executive equipment and methods, picture of which is shown herewith.

Surprised as we were to learn of the extraordinary care with which the parts of their high speed machines of finest steel, hardened and ground to fit, are made, many measured to .0025", we do not know that it may be strange in view of the constant and excessive speed at which their machines are run.

We are pleased to review a copy of the latest edition of their illustrated catalog which has just come to us in the mail descriptive of their various machines that is a work of art seldom excelled in the printing world.

Besides the excellent cuts of the machines, the descriptive matter is couched in such language as to give a clear understanding of all their products to those not familiar with the technical terms of mechanism.

The extensive uses for which their machines are used is truly amazing. We learn from the catalog that their machines are extensively employed for seaming, hemming and edge finishing men's, ladies' and children's knitted underwear, sweaters and other knitted goods, including the wetting the tops of ladies' stockings, toe closing and mending seconds and mock seaming for which there is lately an extensive demand. These machines with modifications and variations are also used for seaming and edging such woven fabrics as ladies' shirt waists, house dresses, baby clothes, bed and army blankets and an almost innumerable variety of other garments and novelties.

The plant of the Merrow Machine Company which was devoted to practically 100 per cent. war work has been as versatily shifted for civil requirements so much neglected during the war.

Knowing the managers as we do and their ever present eager desire to supply the requirements of their customers in machines which they already have as well as new machines, we feel assured there will be a great demand for their new catalog, a compliment to any industry.

The territory of New York city and environs is covered by the Merrow Sales Corporation, 467 Broadway, corner of Grand street, New York city, the number of whose telephone is Canal 8173. The office is under the management of Mr. J. G. G. Merrow, assisted by Oliver Wolcott Merrow. An adequate corps of service men insures prompt attention to all calls for machines and service to those who have been using their machines for many years and are already familiar with the high grade of their product and the full satisfaction from their machines.

Drawing Charity Lines. Mr. Maurice Dubin, the superintendent of the recently established local Jewish charity—"the Jewish Orphans' Home"—writes us that a solicitation for aid was declined by a business firm of reform Jews, on the ground that the new home was orthodox and should be maintained, therefore, by firms of that branch of Judaism. This is interesting. We can understand the viewpoint of the firm that declined to give—but the logic is not good. This same firm might readily contribute to Christian charity and to not regard it inconsistent. "Charity knows no creed or sect. The question is not what its sect or whether it be orthodox or reform—but "Is it worthy?" Does it do good work? Is it deserving, efficient, honest, necessary? Answer these affirmatively—and the duty to give goes with it. There should be no hard and fast drawing of lines in charity. If each denomination or element solely supported its own—many useful bodies would not stand. It makes for broader brotherhood to give to those with whom we differ theologically or in tradition—but whose labors are benevolent and noble.—The Modern View, St. Louis, Mo.

A Modern Pedic Institution.

A shoe store and yet not a shoe store is the enigmatical way in which the new emporium of the Tree Mark Shoe Company, at 32 Delancey street, may be described; for, while the business is primarily the sale of shoes, yet it is not a shoe store in the generally accepted use of that term, but is a building given over to the fitting of the foot with proper footwear, for it may be well to state at the outset that the Tree Mark Shoe Company will not sell a pair of shoes to a prospective customer unless they are a perfect fit.

The Tree Mark Building is, as we have remarked, an "institution," for here we find a modern building especially erected for this concern and separate floors given over for men, women and children. Not alone does this mean better facilities for selling shoes, but a salesman on the children's floor selling shoes for children only is more likely to be an expert in his line if he confines his duties entirely to fitting the feet of children than were he to wait on men, women and children indiscriminately. And the same holds for the floors devoted to men and women.

The Tree Mark Building is not intended for local trade exclusively, but the owners are reaching out for business throughout the city. Their store is accessible from every part, and is convenient to all "L." surface and subway lines.

So much for the Tree Mark Building. And now a word about Tree Mark shoes. The makers have developed a special-fitting shoe which gives proper and adequate support to the foot, and the average man or woman would only realize that practically all of our pedic troubles are caused by improperly supported arches and can be corrected by the use of the Tree Mark shoes if the people would at once avail themselves of the wonderful opportunity which is now afforded them. Tree Mark shoes correct pedic troubles and are comfort shoes because they conform in every detail to the natural shape of the foot, and fit the arch and the heel as snugly as a glove, but without any cramping.

Tree Mark shoes are sold in a variety of leathers and styles, and range in size so as to fit the smallest and the largest, the narrowest and the widest feet, but above all remember that the proprietors will not allow you to leave the store with a Tree Mark shoe unless it has been properly fitted. And Tree Mark shoes, it may be well to remember, are made for the average man whose purse is not so plenteous as those of a profiteer in these days of constantly rising prices. Most of the present stock was contracted for some time ago, when prices had not begun to soar, and the public is being given the advantage.

It would be well for the reader to drop in at the Tree Mark store and verify the many statements made by the paragrapher. But remember that the store closes at 7:30 daily except on Saturday nights it is open until 10.

Rabbi Marius Ranson, for five years minister of Congregation B'nai Jeshurun (the Nathan Barnett Memorial Temple) of Paterson, New Jersey, has accepted a call to become the rabbi of Tremont Temple of the Bronx, located at Broadway avenue and Grand concourse.

In accordance with enlightened congregational procedure Rabbi Ranson was elected without being required to deliver a "trial" sermon.

Ussischkin and Goldstein Decline Ukrainian's Offer.

London (By I. J. P. B.).—Declaring that only persons appointed by the Committee of Jewish Delegations at Paris have the right to represent the Jewish people, Ussischkin and Goldstein have declined to become members of the investigating commission which Ukraina has proposed for the purpose of examining into the Jewish conditions in that country. In their reply these two leaders suggest to the Ukrainian government that it place its proposal before the official Paris organization, which is the only body empowered to act in such a case.

CEREMONIAL JUDAISM.

By Rabbi A. E. Abramowitz.

To those people who have lately made a study of Judaism, it appears that Orthodox Judaism is entirely ceremonial. Very few people know that the ceremonial part is only the outer expression of the ethical and spiritual which is the inner part of Judaism. This ceremonial Judaism consists in symbols representing religious principles and a Jew performing these ceremonies should bear in mind the principles and act accordingly.

Every ceremonial is but the materialization of some moral principle or ideal. It reminds us of what we have to strive for and finally become part of our life. The real Orthodox Jew puts more stress on the ethical part of his religion than on the ceremonial, since the latter without the former would be like an electric globe without the light, like the shell without the kernel.

To those who have never made a study of it Orthodox Judaism is a sealed book. They look upon its ceremonies as something which belongs to the barbarian age. But those who have studied it see its beauty and understand that the ceremonial part can not be separated from the ethical. As the Zohar expresses itself, "God and the Torah is one." That means the principle and the ceremony is one. And if the spiritual and ethical are rational and compatible with modern civilization, why should not the ceremonials be so, when they are representations of the former.

But the ignorant Jewish masses who have never learned of the high and noble ideals that are represented by the various ceremonies, have considered the latter as their entire religion, and the result was that when people observed such a religious act, not knowing that this was not true Judaism, they considered Judaism as a dogmatic, irrational religion which is incompatible with modern life. And, as the Jew is always swerving from extreme to extreme, he swerved from extreme ceremonial religion to an extreme spiritual and ethical religion. Observing how many practiced the ceremonial part only, they felt keenly the need for something spiritual and ethical. And instead of endeavoring to revive true Judaism, which was a blend of spiritual, ethical and ceremonial, they created a spiritual and ethical religion only, without any ceremony attached to it. This is Reformed Judaism.

Let us consider whether it is possible for Jewish religion to exist without either one of them. Experience has convinced us that ceremonial religion only without the ethical and spiritual can not exist. The ignorant state of the present age concerning religious matters is due partly to the adherence of the present age to the ceremonial only. People can not find any interest in its study. But experience has convinced us that spiritual and ethical religion without the ceremonial can not exist either.

In the days of the Nazarene, the Jews put more stress on the ceremonial part than they did on the spiritual and ethical, and the indirect result was Christianity. When Christianity was first formed, it was nothing but pure Judaism devoid of its ceremonial part. But if it was to become a religion it needed both. It needed principles and it also needed something to awaken the love to perform them. Ceremonies awaken this love. And Christianity not having them, being at that time purely spiritual, was very soon compelled to adopt some ceremonies from the pagans. And even now those principles in Christianity that

THE HIGHEST CHOICE

Do not let it be merely a question of initial cost when you make your choice of pianos. The matchless music of the Steinway has lifted it above the "price" atmosphere for all time.

It is true, the Steinway does cost a little more. But no one who owns a Steinway has ever a shadow of regret for the price paid. It is but little higher than the cost of other pianos, and the Steinway carries within its perfect mechanism the guarantee of a satisfaction beyond all price.

For more than three score years it has been the ideal of the greatest music masters of their day. So the Steinway must command your respectful attention before your choice is made.

have no ceremonies to materialize them remain dead letters. They are never practiced. There is something lacking, something which should actuate the people to live in accordance with these principles.

Reformed Judaism which has discarded the ceremonial part will very soon find out how necessary it is to have ceremonies representing each and every principle, spiritual and ethical; otherwise their followers will have to seek comfort in some other religion as many of them do already, leaving the Reformed Temple and joining the Christian Scientist Church. And if Reformed Judaism needs a ceremonial part why adopt new ones when the old ones are good.

We need not prove that the ceremonial part of Orthodox Judaism is good, the sole fact that it has preserved both the Jewish race and its ideals proves that nothing better can be found. We would ask of all those who discard any ceremony which is practiced by Orthodox Jews because it appears irrational, or incompatible with modern civilization, to make a thorough study of it and then they will find the beautiful symbol it is, the noble ideal it represents, and they would be proud to perform it and anxious to see others do the same.

If we are to perform our mission and bring light to the world, we must have light in ourselves first. And never could that light become part of ourselves unless we observe ceremonial Judaism. As we said, "God and the Torah is one." Ceremonial, spiritual, ethical Judaism are but the various phases of this one great unity, the religion of Israel.—The Jewish Herald.

BROOKLYN NOTES.

Big Brothers and Big Sisters Wanted.

The Brooklyn Jewish Big Brother and Big Sister Committee, with headquarters at 12 Graham avenue, has issued the following appeal which is addressed to all Brooklyn Jewish organizations:

"A compelling emergency exists in the Borough of Brooklyn in reference to Jewish delinquents, between the ages of 7 and 17. A distressing number of complaints is continually being made against our Brooklyn Jewish boys and girls.

"Various reasons are assigned for this state of moral unlawfulness—mental deficiency, improper home environment, lack of parental control and influence, physical disability on the part of parents or children, or both.

"The deplorable, disgraceful fact is that we have not enough Big Brothers and Sisters to handle all the cases. We have fifty Big Brothers and twenty Big Sisters for the whole of Brooklyn, with five to ten complaints against Jewish boys and girls coming in every day. We need five times that number of workers.

"The work calls for personal service; the contribution of about one evening a week and no money; just lend your mind and heart.

"For the purpose of arousing the Jews of Brooklyn for the support of this important work, the undersigned representing various Jewish organizations interested in Big Brother and Big Sister work was formed under the auspices of the Brooklyn Federation of Jewish Charities for the purpose of trying to help save as many of our Jewish youth as possible.

"We are about to organize a general Big Brother and Big Sister Committee, which we hope will include a representative of your organization and every interested Jewish society in Brooklyn. We, therefore, urgently request that you present this communication to your organization and appoint a representative, with power to act, to attend a meeting of the Big Brothers and Big Sisters Committee, which will be held on Tuesday evening, October 7, 1919, at the Unity Club of Brooklyn, Bedford avenue and Dean street, at 8.15 p. m.

"Yours for immediate co-operation.
"Samuel Stark, chairman; Miss Leona Shankroff, secretary; Max Abelman, Mrs. Abraham H. Arons, Alexander H. Gelsmar, Rabbi Louis D. Gross, Herman Neaderland, Algeron I. Nova, Walter N. Rothschild, Albert D. Schanzer and Arnold M. Schmidt."

Cong. Petach Tikvah. The daily Hebrew school has resumed its sessions with the largest enrollment in the history of this popular school. Registration will continue for the next week, and it is expected that the number of pupils will reach the 200 mark.

The Polish Government, far from encouraging Jewish artisans and laborers, is constantly discharging them. Mr. Morgenthau recently received a deputation of Jews at Warsaw who had been dismissed from employment at the railroads. To that number another batch of Jewish artisans employed at the railroads can now be added. The authorities gave as a reason for their action the objections of the Christian Union to the employment of Jews. When, however, the union was approached on the matter, it categorically denied the assertion of the authorities, and the full facts of the case were submitted to the government.

Rabbi Dr. Siegmund Maybaum, senior member of the Berlan Rabbinate, died last month after a long illness. A native of Miskolcz (Hungary) where he was born in 1844, he studied theology at the Yeshiboth in Pressburg and Eisenstadt, and afterwards at the Breslau Seminary. In 1881 he received a "call" to Berlin, where he gained a reputation as one of the foremost Jewish pulpit orators and theologians in Germany. He was the adviser, in all matters, of the Berlin community, which had the fullest confidence in him. His published works include "Die Entwicklung des alt-Israelitischen Priestertums" (1880), "Des Prophetentums" (1889), a book on Jewish Homiletics, and numerous volumes of sermons.

The Convention.
 The administration has won an overwhelming victory at the convention of the Zionist Organization of America.
 The report of the National Executive Committee was adopted by a vote of 285 against 25; 500 delegates did not vote at all.
 From the very beginning the administration adopted an apologetic attitude.
 Judge Mack, the president, promised that in the future there would be more democratic action, although we prefer to wait until the day after to see whether this democracy will be merely a theory or a solid fact. Judge Mack further, in the course of his speech, proclaimed that Palestine would have to be freed first from malaria and trachoma before any immigration could be thought of. But that there was malaria and trachoma in Palestine was known at the time the Balfour declaration was made public, aye, this was known forty years ago. And yet the pioneers went to Palestine and established colonies, and succeeded. This is throwing a red herring across the trail.
 What the Jewish people want to know and the leaders of the Zionist Organization of America should be in a position to tell—what are we getting?
 This question has not been answered as yet. A reply may be given before the convention adjourns, but the administration, secure in its victory, may put off the answer indefinitely.
 The delegates who went to Chicago are first of all Zionists, and when the plea is made that the men who have been sharply criticised have served well and are good Zionists as well, then in a forgiving mood they passed this vote of confidence. Why 500 abstained from voting is not plain, unless they felt that the vote would be large enough without them.
 The question of the open door in Palestine has not been answered, except indirectly, by the statement of Judge Mack above referred to. But it will have to be answered.
 Of course, there is malaria and there is trachoma in Palestine. But there was and there still is malaria in this country, and people have come here and settled and prospered. Leave it to the genius and to the courage and to the indomitable will of the Jewish people to overcome all difficulties. What the pioneers accomplished with insufficient means, surely the Jews today, with plenty of funds and modern skill, will be able to do in a yet larger measure. The task of the moment is to get Jews into Palestine, and not to dampen the ardor of Zionists besides disillusioning the millions of our people who look to Eretz Yisroel as the only way out of their misery, as the only place where they can be safe from pogroms.
 The Zionist Organization of America
 essays to be the only Zionist "landsmannschaft" in this country. It must be prepared then to issue statements that will clarify the situation. Judge Mack warned against exaggeration. "Zionists must not exaggerate," he said. It was a word spoken in season, and we hope that those who send out statements will take it to heart.
 Whatever the convention may finally decide to do, it will not depress Zionists who will go on hoping and working until the goal is reached. Zionism is greater than any one person, than any administration. The attainment may be delayed, but achievement will come because the Jewish people will it so.
 Leaders come and leaders go; principles remain forever. The eternal Jew will conquer. He will have his homeland and dwell in safety beneath his fig tree and his vine.
 The administration has won a victory.
 Conquerors are wisest when they make good use of their victories for the welfare of all.—I. L. Brill in Jewish Daily News.

ORGANIZATION OF SIBERIAN JEWRY.

Though the Jewish population of Siberia is not very numerous, and is half assimilated, Zionist influences have always been very strong there, says a writer in a recent number of the London Zionist Bulletin. Siberian Jewry, as a whole, has very warmly supported the Zionist movement and the Central Committee of the Zionist Organization in Russia. The second revolution, which took place on November 9, 1917, temporarily separated Siberia from Bolshevik Russia, and the Siberian Jews were confronted with the heavy task of communal organization. The latest copies of the only Zionist and Jewish weekly published in Irkutsk, the capital of Siberia, show what a tremendous work has been carried out by a handful of energetic Zionists.

The Zionists had to organize themselves, to found a newspaper, to establish central institutions of their own, to organize local committees, to get into touch with the outer world, and to spread information in Siberia about what was going on in the Jewish world outside Siberia. Although the Siberian Jewish community is comparatively very young and the majority of its members consists of refugees from Russia who have hardly had time to recover from the unheard-of sufferings which drove them to the East, the leaders, among whom the Zionists played a very prominent part, rightly appreciated the importance of bringing about a proper organization of Siberian Jewry as a whole. All the communities had to be reorganized and the democratic elements in them strengthened. The work was carried out very energetically, and towards the middle of this year Siberia was organized both as regards Zionism and communal life in general.

The organization of the active elements of Siberian Jewry was carried out by means of two conferences. The Zionist Conference adopted resolutions of which the following is a summary:

The Zionist societies and individual Zionists are urged by all means to support a widely developed system of cultural work. The entire system of popular education is to serve the purpose of establishing and maintaining the spiritual bond between the younger generation and the bulk of Jewry. The language in which instruction is to be carried on is Hebrew, the only subject taught in the State language being only that language itself.

The conference approved of the participation of Zionist representatives in the representative institutions of Siberia, and endorsed their policy of co-operation with the other national minorities which adopted as a basis of their activity the principles of democracy.

For carrying on colonization work in Palestine a special committee was set up, whose duties are to keep the Jewish population properly informed as to new openings for capital and labor in Palestine, and to assist in organizing various Jewish Joint Stock Companies which intend having relations with the Palestine market. Co-operative associations of workmen are to be encouraged, and assistance is to be given to those who desire to take up agricultural work in order to settle afterwards in Palestine.

The Central Organization of the Jewish Communities of Siberia and the Ural region was established at a conference of communal representatives which took place in the middle of January. The main resolutions passed at the conference are as follows:

1. Every Jewish community with a number of no fewer than 20 families, and with no fewer than 30 adults (women enjoy the same franchise as men) form a unit of the system of Jewish self-government in Siberia.

2. Communes of 50-250, of 250-500, and of 500 and more families, elect their administrative councils of 11, 23 and 35 members, respectively. These councils elect executive committees of 3, 5 and 7, respectively. Smaller communities elect an executive of three members directly.

3. The competence of the Administrative Councils is defined so as to include not only educational work, economic assistance to members of the community, charitable institutions, civil registration, medical and sanitary work, but also the task of assisting the work of the national reconstruction of Palestine by supplying means to various organizations engaged in the work of colonizing Palestine.

All the local branches of the great Central Organizations of Russian Jewry are to be handed over to the local communes.

Jewish National Council. Representatives of these reorganized communes, together with a few representatives of political parties, form the Jewish Siberian National Council, which has an executive of five members. The National Council is the only authorized representative of Siberian and Arthur Jewry, and is entitled to deal on behalf of the population, whom they represent, with all government institutions and with Jewish communities of any other country. The income of the council and the executive is to be supplied by the communal councils from the proceeds of the system of self-taxation which is being introduced.

One of the most important features of the work of the conference of the communes was the adoption of the idea that work for Palestine is not the business solely of the Zionists, but also that of the Jewish Communes. A central organization of all the communes, the National Council, disposing of a definite budget could easily contribute a certain share of its income (to be raised by a special voluntary tax) to work in Palestine, the principle of which it has adopted.

The task of organizing Siberian Jewry on a basis of national autonomy is proceeding very successfully. The creative work of the National Council is greatly hampered by the conditions of local political life and by the recrudescence of anti-Semitism. Newspapers connected with headquarters of the supreme commander-in-chief, Admiral Kolchak, openly agitate against the Jews, accusing them of everything that happens to go wrong in Russia and threatening them with revenge. A protest sent in by the council to the admiral caused the authorities to subdue the violent propaganda, which, even in its milder form, accused the Jewish population of the most nonsensical crimes, and kept them in a constant state of anxiety.

The next great task demanding the attention of the National Council is the improvement in the position of the Jewish prisoners of war (Austrian and German) who happen to be in Siberia.

Preparing for Palestine. The Zionist Organization of Siberia displays much energy. Besides considerable collections for the national fund, much attention is devoted to the establishment of Hebrew classes, to the organization and development of the "Hechaluth" (Pioneer) groups, to the registration of those who prepare themselves to emigrate to Palestine and to the formation of various undertakings for trading with Palestine, e. g., a joint stock company, "Hakedem," with a capital of one million roubles, was formed in Vladivostok. The purpose of this company is to develop commerce in Palestine, and it met with much popularity. Six hundred thousand roubles are already subscribed.

The founding of a Siberian Jewish colony on co-operative lines is under consideration.

A new industrial and colonization company has been formed in Harbin. The title of the company will be "Hamizrach Harochok" (the Far East), and its capital, five million roubles, is divided into shares of 5,000 roubles (nominally 1,500) each. The chief purpose of this company is to establish various industrial undertakings (steamship lines, factories and works) on a purely commercial basis. The company is to be transferred to Palestine as soon as practicable. A branch of this company has been opened in Irkutsk. The movement in favor of the formation of "Atsuza" groups is developing, and in May the question was under lively discussion. The Siberian organization has entered into direct communication with the Palestine office in Palestine, under whose direction it is now preparing for the coming period of emigration.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

Leo Ornstein, pianist-composer, will give only two recitals in New York this season. Both are to be at Aeolian Hall, Saturday afternoon, October 18, and Saturday afternoon, November 29.

For the first recital Ornstein has arranged an all-modern program which will include the works of Scriabine, Debussy, Ravel, and his own sensational suite, "Poems of 1917," played for the first time here.

The first Saturday afternoon concert of the season at Carnegie Hall will be given by Max Rosen, the American violinist, on October 11. Mr. Rosen has been spending the summer at Lake George, coaching his third American season's repertoire with his teacher, Professor Auer. Over seventy concerts throughout the country have already been booked for Mr. Rosen. These will take him from New York to the Pacific coast, and among them are appearances with the St. Louis and Minneapolis symphony orchestras.

Serge Prokofieff, the young Russian whose triple distinctions of pianist, composer and conductor have revealed him as an artist of great versatility as well as of remarkable gifts, will give his first recital of the season at Aeolian Hall on Sunday afternoon, October 12. This concert will be most interesting, as it will introduce Mr. Prokofieff as a player of Bach and Beethoven, as well as of his own compositions and those of his Russian confreres. Both the Philadelphia and Boston symphony orchestras will introduce Mr. Prokofieff's scythian suite on their programs this season.

This New Store Opens on the World's Two Greatest Thoroughfares.

The new Ackerman store in New York has the distinction of being one of the largest exclusive hat stores in the United States. This store, opened May 15 at 208 Fifth avenue, is the crowning achievement of Charles W. Ackerman, known in New York as the "Hat Specialist," and who now conducts three exclusive hat stores—294 Third avenue; 9 East 23d street and 208 Fifth avenue.

The store at 208 Fifth avenue is probably the only hat store in the world with equal frontage on two streets known the world over, Fifth avenue and Broadway. Broadway and Fifth avenue, New York, come together and cross at Madison Square, and it is just before the crossing point that Mr. Ackerman's store is located. It comes in just where the dividing line narrows, and hence the store runs from street to street, a length of 128 feet, with a frontage of 28 feet on Fifth avenue and 28 feet on Broadway.

It is truly palatial in its appointments and finish. The interior is all of Circassian walnut, with special hardwood equipment, as is the floor overlaid with linoleum. The fixtures are the last word in modern equipment as is the lighting system. Wall cases extend the entire length of the store on both sides, with inset mirrors at convenient spaces. Beneath the mirrors are drawers for reserve stock and caps. There are no cases on the floor, the wall cases on both sides of the main floor, extending from floor to balcony, furnishing artistic and sufficient display arrangement. Mr. Ackerman plans to add a few tables, chairs and cases, however. A broad stairway leads to the balcony, a spacious and splendidly appointed department where hats will also be sold. The Fifth avenue end of the balcony is devoted to military hats. Display cases similar to those on the main floor are found on either side of the balcony. The cashier's desk and wrapping department are located on the first floor in the center of the room and nearby, toward the Broadway entrance, there is a broad, comfortable settee of Circassian walnut for the accommodation of customers.

Charles W. Ackerman, who has given to New York this ideal hat store, was born in Albany, N. Y., in 1865. Early in life he was apprenticed to the hat trade and sent out to learn every branch of the industry. In 1885 he came to New York city as a journeyman hatter and worked in various shops until 1889 when he opened a small store at First avenue and 23d street. There for a time he made his own hats, installing a repair department which soon became very popular. In a short time his business grew to such an extent that he was obliged to take larger quarters and moved to 294 Third avenue. Some time later he opened what was then the only exclusive Stetson hat store in New York at 9 East 23d street.

Mr. Ackerman employs a large force of salesmen and other help in his three stores. During the war he inaugurated a bonus system which insures to each employe a part in the business. Personally, Mr. Ackerman is a man of broad and kindly nature, best illustrated in the fact that he is known to every traffic "cop" in the vicinity of his three stores, and that he never passes one without stopping for a neighborly word. He is loved by the news boys of the city, and his employes swear by him.

"Live and let live" is the policy on which he has founded his life and his business.

Cunard Line Acquires the Imperator.

Announcement was made today from the Cunard offices in New York that the former Hamburg-America liner Imperator had been acquired by the Cunard Steamship Company, Ltd., under assignment from the British Ministry of Shipping, and at the earliest practicable date would sail under the Cunard house flag from New York to England. It is probable that in due course the Imperator will join the two famous Cunarders, Aquitania and Muretania, in providing a weekly service from New York to Cherbourg and Southampton.

It will be recalled that the Imperator, one of the largest ships in the world, was in Hamburg when the war broke out and stayed there until after the signing of the armistice, when she was assigned to the work of repatriating American troops.

When she was launched shortly before the beginning of hostilities the Imperator received wide attention because of the luxurious nature of her appointments and her enormous size. She is 919 feet long, has a beam of 90 feet, is of 50,000 tons register, and 62,000 horsepower. There are nine decks from the water line to the bridge, and they contain a Pompeian bath and swimming pool, a complete Turkish bath establishment, a gymnasium, and a la carte restaurant and winter garden, in addition to the usual public rooms.

The Imperator is at present in dock in the Hudson River refitting before assuming her new role as a passenger ship.

Immigrants Celebrate Rosh Hashanah.

In connection with the celebration of Rosh Hashanah the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society of America held services for immigrants at its home, 229-231 East Broadway, and at Ellis Island, where within the recent week quite a number of Jewish immigrants have arrived and at its branches in Baltimore, Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, San Francisco and Seattle.

Prior to leaving for this country, Mr. Samuel Mason made special arrangements for such services in Yokohama, Japan, Harbin, Vladivostok, and Irkutsk, Siberia.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A Bouquet.

Editor of HEBREW STANDARD:
Allow me to congratulate you on your excellent issue of September 5.

Ex-President Taft deserves the gratitude of our race for his able article, "The Progressive World Struggle of the Jews for Civil Equality."

He proves beyond the shadow of a doubt that the intolerance of the Christian religion is responsible for the nineteen hundred years of Jewish persecution and he admirably points out how the great Jewish problem can be solved. But, even if Jewish equality be recognized through the world, it will not stop religious hatred. Religious hatred will only cease when false teaching in religion will be eliminated. The false teaching and preaching that the Jews killed Jesus is responsible for the persecution of our race. According to their New Testament the Romans are responsible for the crucifixion of Jesus.

There never was a legal execution among the Hebrews by crucifixion, therefore even if certain Jews were implicated in the crime it was a lynching, and the Jewish nation can no more be held responsible for it than the State of Georgia can be held responsible for the lynching of Frank. It behooves the great men of Christendom to eradicate this false teaching and then and not until then can there be the teaching of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of men.

Rabbi Louis Wolsey shows the slander on the Jewish race in plays and novels. Very logically he points out that the religion of villains like Iago and Macbeth is not mentioned, whereas Shylock is pictured as a Jew to convey the impression that his is a Jewish trait.

I desire to call the attention of the rabbi that the expression of Judas is used in every walk of life among Christians, indicating that the Jew is treacherous.

Another false impression I heard in the discussion among lawyers and judges and in the daily papers to ridicule the Jewish law by saying, like the old Jewish law, "An eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth." As a matter of fact the Jewish law meant, when one injures an eye, he must pay damages for the eye the same as our present laws.

What is the remedy?

We must agitate at every opportunity to protest against the term Judas and to enlighten the public about the Jewish laws, and not till then will the Jew be recognized and admitted on an equal footing in society. DR. ZWISOHN.

Anti-Semitism Manifest in Germany.

The Wiener Morgenzeitung states: A manufacturer in Germany is producing sticks of indiarubber of two kinds—one called the "big Kohn" and the other the "little Kohn." The sticks are recommended as the best tool with which to fight the Jews.

The Berlin correspondent of the Morning Post contributed an article to an issue last month in which, after asserting that Germany has profited largely through the growth of Jews on her soil, he deals with the anti-Jewish feeling now prevalent in the country and its causes. He incidentally refers to Dr. Preuss, who, as Minister of the Interior, was mainly responsible for the drafting of the new constitution (Dr. Preuss is a Jew, and a relative of a well-known communal worker in London). As instances of the hostility to Jews, the Morning Post correspondent says:

In several university towns students have committed anti-Jewish excesses, although the municipal and university authorities have done all in their power to prevent it. Much ill-feeling, moreover, has been manifested towards Jews at summer resorts. In some of the Baltic watering places Jews have held meetings in which they passed resolutions demanding military protection, which was in a few cases actually sent them.

One sees leaflets dropped in railway carriages and other places headed "Los von Juda," and a few evenings ago there was an exciting scene in the Kurfurstendam, a much used thoroughfare in the west of the town, owing to Jews attacking men who were offering anti-Semitic pamphlets for sale. There was even shooting with the revolver.

Passing the other day a wooden Hindenburg statue, I saw a board with the lettering on it hanging from the hero's hand. The inscription, which was clear enough to be read from the pathway, ran: "Oh, hero Hindenburg, who wast once before the savior of the German people, we now again appeal to thee in our deep distress. Take an iron broom in thy hand, oh hero, and sweep all Jews out of the land."

Tschupp, Katherine A.—The People of the State of New York, by the Grace of God, Free and Independent, To Elizabeth Gabler, Alice Allgauer, Lena Steger and Joseph Steger, as executrix and the heirs and next of kin of Katherine A. Tschupp, deceased, and to the Attorney General of the State of New York, Send Greeting: Whereas, Anna Schneider, who resides at 4 Stratford road, Flushing, New York, has lately applied to the Surrogate's Court of our County of New York to have a certain instrument in writing, bearing date December 6, 1917, relating to both real and personal property, duly proved as the last will and testament of Katherine A. Tschupp, who was at the time of her death a resident of the County of New York, deceased. Therefore, you and each of you are cited to show cause before the Surrogate's Court of our County of New York, at the Hall of Records, in the County of New York, on the 27th day of October, one thousand nine hundred and nineteen, at half-past ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, why the said will and testament should not be admitted to probate as a will of real and personal property. In testimony whereof, we have caused the seal of the Surrogate's Court of the said County of New York to be hereunto affixed. Witness, Honorable Robert Ludlow Fowler, a Surrogate of our said County of New York [L. S.] York, at said County, the 16th day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and nineteen. DANIEL J. DOWDNEY, Clerk of the Surrogate's Court.

BUTOW, CARL (or CARL BUETOW).—In pursuance of an order of Honorable John P. Cobalan, a Surrogate of the County of New York, notice is hereby given to all persons having claims against Carl Buetow (or Carl Buetow), late of the County of New York, deceased, to present the same, with vouchers therefor, to the subscriber, at his place of transacting business, at the office of Samuel B. Hamburger, her attorney, No. 2 Rector Street, in the Borough of Manhattan, in the City of New York, State of New York, on or before the 22d day of December next. I. ed. New York, the 15th day of June, 1919. HEDWIG STEINBERG, Executrix. SAMUEL B. HAMBURGER, Attorney for Executrix, 2 Rector Street, New York City.

Extract From Letter Received From Jaffa, June 11, 1919.

"To the National Office of the Red Mogen David,

"Dear Sirs: "In respect to the program of our work, we herewith give you the following report:

1. "Organization work: We are in constant communication with different parts of our country. One of our main aims is to unite the whole population into a Red Mogen David organization. We have sent out to all cities and colonies of the country leaflets, receipts and constitutions. We have elected temporary committees, and in many cities permanent committees, which are very active.

2. "The work of our committee: We came to an understanding with the Medical Society that they should give medical attention to Legionnaires. We have seen to it that shower baths were installed in the camps. We have opened a canteen in the 39th battalion, which develops rapidly; we are about to open such canteens in Mikvah Israel, Ber-Jacob which are located near the 38th battalion, and Bala and Raffa. We have sent a few of our members there to organize the work. However, there are many obstacles because of military administration.

"We have undertaken to supply the Legionnaires with books, to form libraries in the camps; we have appropriated a sum for the furniture, for binding the books and for maintaining the libraries, especially for maintaining the library in the 40th battalion.

"We have arranged for a series of concerts through the Singing School 'Sulamith' in Jaffa. Some concerts were arranged for the groups that are located in Jaffa and for the legionnaires of the 38th and 39th battalions. Refreshments were served at these concerts. At present we are occupied in preparing a big concert in Raffa for the Palestinian Regiment, but we are confronted with the difficulty that it is very far from here.

"We have organized a Culture Committee with the assistance of the best literary men of Palestine, for the purpose of delivering lectures and forming various courses for the Legionnaires. The Culture Committee is already active, having secured the co-operation of the military authorities. We expect to form such courses in the different camps, but we lack text books and other materials which hinder our work.

"At the expense of a lot of energy we have succeeded in arranging excursions for the American and English Legionnaires to give them an opportunity to get acquainted with the land. Wherever the Legionnaires pass on these excursions we send out committees to meet them.

"We have distributed among the Legionnaires a certain quantity of writing paper and envelopes. The high cost of all materials has compelled us to apply to you by wire for at least 10,000 sheets of writing paper and 5,000 envelopes weekly.

"In our cable we asked you to send us text books, newspapers and reading books for the Legionnaires, in Hebrew, Yiddish and English. We asked you for six copies of each, but we now find six copies will not be enough because the regiments are not located in one place.

"It is also necessary to open libraries in the soldier clubs. In the soldier house of Jerusalem, there is a fine library, and it would be desirable to open such libraries in the soldier house in Jaffa, in the canteens in Rishon Le Zion, Petach-Tikvah, Ber-Jacob, and in other colonies where Legionnaires are found.

"We are in need of a good moving picture apparatus. We expect to issue a memorandum book, which should serve the Legionnaire as an information book in regard to everything about the land and our history. This requires an expenditure of about £500.

"We agree with you in your just request that the Red Mogen David be a non-partisan organization. Our organization is such and therefore has the sympathy of the entire population.

"(Signed) BEZALEL JAFFA, "For the Central Committee of the Red Mogen David."

Salvini as Diagnostician.

Frequent recitals by the artist-pupils at the studios of Mario Salvini, 206 West Seventy-first street, New York, serve to illustrate his practical ideas and not only physical but psychological treatment of the voice and its possibilities, scope, function and general development. His mental capacity is far-reaching, and acute is his observation in reference to character and talent, especially as he has traveled in many countries and is acquainted with the prevailing conditions in Europe as well as the country of his adoption, the United States.

Mario Salvini is often consulted by students and professional singers in reference to the condition of the vocal organs and kindred topics. Among these applicants are persons from various parts of the continent who have ascertained from Signor Salvini whether their methods of voice production were correct. The latter asserts: "In no profession does such confusion exist as in the vocal art." He discusses this interesting and much disputed topic with authority, for he has gone into it deeply, and says further: "Nature produces beautiful voices, but they require perfect training and development. The throat is the most subtle instrument known, therefore it demands careful treatment."

STATEMENT OF THE OWNERSHIP, MANAGEMENT, CIRCULATION, ETC., REQUIRED BY THE ACT OF CONGRESS OF AUGUST 24, 1912.

Of the Hebrew Standard, published weekly at New York, N. Y., for October 1, 1919. State of New York, County of New York, ss. Before me, a Commissioner of Deeds in and for the State and County aforesaid, personally appeared William J. Solomon, who, having been duly sworn according to law, deposes and says that he is the publisher of The Hebrew Standard, and that the following is, to the best of his knowledge and belief, a true statement of the ownership, management (and if a daily paper, the circulation), etc., of the aforesaid publication for the date shown in the above caption, required by the Act of August 24, 1912, embodied in section 443, Postal Laws and Regulations, printed in the reverse of this form, to wit:

1. That the names and addresses of the publisher, editor, managing editor and business managers are: Publisher, William J. Solomon, 87 Nassau street, New York. Editor, William J. Solomon, 87 Nassau street, New York. Managing editor, none. Business manager, none.

2. That the owners are: (Give names and addresses of individual owners, or, if a corporation, give its name and the names and addresses of stockholders owning or holding 1 per cent. or more of the total amount of stock.) William J. Solomon, 87 Nassau street, New York.

3. That the known bondholders, mortgagees and other security holders owning or holding 1 per cent. or more of total amount of bonds, mortgages or other securities are: (If there are none, so state.) None.

4. That the two paragraphs next above, giving the names of the owners, stockholders and security holders, if any, contain not only the list of stockholders and security holders as they appear upon the books of the company, but also, in cases where the stockholder or security holder appears upon the books of the company or trustee or in any other fiduciary relation, the name of the person or corporation for whom such trustee is acting, is given; also that the said two paragraphs contain statements embracing a full knowledge and belief as to the circumstances and conditions under which stockholders and security holders who do not appear upon the books of the company as trustees, hold stock and securities in a capacity other than that of a bona fide owner; and that this affiant has no reason to believe that any other person, association or corporation has any interest, direct or indirect, in the said stock, bonds or other securities than as so stated by him.

5. That the average number of copies of each issue of this publication sold or distributed, through the mails or otherwise, to paid subscribers during the six months preceding the date shown above is (This information is required from daily publications only.) WM. J. SOLOMON. (Signature of editor, publisher, business manager or owner.) Sworn to and subscribed before me this 10th day of September, 1919. SOL. DANNENBERG, Commissioner of Deeds, New York City, New York County Clerk's 150, Reg. No. 20,041; Register Nos. Kings, 149; Bronx, 2,015; Queens County Clerk's No. 2,401; certificate filed in Richmond County. Commission expires November 12, 1920.

"AS THE RABBI'S WIFE"

A Bit of Gentle Satire—By E. C. Ehrlich.
 Time—The Present. Place—Any congregation in any provincial town.
 (We know it is the rabbi's study because there is the inevitable silver loving cup upon one bookcase and the equally inevitable copy of Sargent's "Prophets" over the other, both gifts of grateful but unimaginative confirmation classes: A flat desk, overflowing waste basket and bookshelves, several chairs and a telephone stand complete the furnishings. From the bathroom across the hall come the sounds of splashing and grating as the rabbi kills two birds with one stone, bathing and shaving and rehearsing his Friday night sermon all at the same time. Mrs. Rabbi passes through the study, pinning up her hair with one hand, picking up son's toys with the other. She is about to follow the trail of blocks and tin soldiers to the bedroom where the young household tyrant now sits howling for his supper, when the telephone bell rings.)

Mrs. Rabbi (glancing through force of habit at the clock on the mantle piece, which, being a wedding present, can't be prevailed up to run): "Heavens, it's late now and I haven't half started to dress for temple or—yes, Ferndale 2438 (her face falling, her voice growing more cordial as she recognizes the voice of the leader of the Sisterhood and the uncrowned head of congregational affairs in general) oh—Mrs. Hirshfeld, Yes, I am a little busy just now, but—"

Mrs. Hirshfeld: "But this is important. I could wait till tomorrow but I want to get it off my mind. Mrs. Powers (impressively) yes, Mrs. Powers, the president of the Woman's Club, asked me to suggest one of our representative Jewish women to be in the receiving line when we give our tea and reception for Madam Denne next month. I like to do a person a good turn when I can, so I suggested you. So when she calls up be sure to accept. It will look good to the goyim to have one of us in the receiving line for a change."

Mrs. Rabbi (weakly): "But, really, I can't—you know I don't go out much—"

Mrs. Hirshfeld: "And everybody talks about it, too. Your husband never misses a Rotary luncheon and you never get out of the house, except to temple, and, of course, you have to do that just to keep up appearances."
 Mrs. Rabbi (remembering that she has promised her husband to be polite to the congregational tyrant who nearly drove the last rabbi to an early grave): "But I haven't a maid and I can't leave the baby—"

Mrs. Hirshfeld: "Let the rabbi look after him once—he's got plenty of time, hasn't he? (Severely) Without a girl again? But I was telling one of the ladies downtown only yesterday that it's no wonder your girls always run over you when you humor them so. Why, your Lizzie was bragging to my Mary last week that you let her have the key to the ice box—and butter at 70 cents a pound, too. God knows what she must have cost you when your back was turned."

Mrs. Rabbi (with dangerous politeness): "I was saying I couldn't leave the baby—"
 Mrs. Hirshfeld: "If you refuse Mrs. Powers, it will make rishus, and as the rabbi's wife, you have to be careful. I'll send my Mary over to look after the baby while you're gone."

Mrs. Rabbi: "Really, I couldn't. I never trust senny to strangers."

Mrs. Hirshfeld (in righteous indignation): "We thought when we hired a married rabbi, his wife would be a help to us; but you went and had a baby right away and tied yourself down to the house, and, as I was saying to one of the ladies at the Lutheran chicken supper the other night, before we know it you'll be having another baby. I suppose, though I do think the rabbi's wife ought to consider the congregation first and try to help out when she can, even if she is devoted to her family. (She pauses for breath, while Mrs. Rabbi finishes pinning up her hair with her free hand). Then you won't help Mrs. Powers out?"

Mrs. Rabbi: "I'm afraid not, but—"
 Mrs. Hirshfeld: "I hope you'll think it over for I must tell you to your face that I'm disappointed. I thought as the rabbi's wife you'd be glad to do Mrs. Powers a favor."

(A wild shriek from the bedroom).
 Mrs. Rabbi (starting up): "You'll have to excuse me—it's son again. He's so lively I can't leave him a minute."

Mrs. Hirshfeld: "You'd better be tending to him instead of keeping me when I ought to be dressing for dinner. And if you happen to hear of a good girl call me up right away, won't you? My Mary's getting so independent she may leave any time. I was saying to Mr. H. just this morning that I'd be glad to let you have her if she won't stay with me and you lose your next girl. I've got a good heart, if I do say myself."
 (Son indignantly): "Wow-w-o-w!"

Mrs. Hirshfeld: "I can hear that poor baby over the wire. Your downstairs neighbor, Mrs. Turner, told me it was really pitiful how you let him cry sometimes. I know you don't mind my saying it, but I would be awfully careful not to get her talking. Why make rishus among the goyim, and as the rabbi's wife you have to be careful. But I'll have to hurry—I'll be late as it is."
 (She rings off hastily, releasing Mrs. Rabbi, who rushes to warm a bottle of milk for her howling offspring. From the bathroom issues the rabbi's pulpit voice.)

Mr. Rabbi: "There is such a thing as a civic conscience, my friends, a conscience peculiarly modern, yet as old as the prophets who fearlessly faced priest and potentate, who—"

The Telephone: "Ting-ting—darn it—hurry—ting—"

Mrs. Rabbi (from the baby's crib): "Dear, please answer the phone."
 Mr. Rabbi: "I'm all lathered and I've got two more pages—"
 (Mrs. Rabbi hands son his bottle with serious misgivings as he likes to hear it smash against the dresser, and rushes to the phone.)

Genevieve Periberg: "I forgot what page our Sabbath school lesson's on. (Indignantly) The rabbi's busy and can't be disturbed? You think he mightn't know, anyhow, and I'd better call up my teacher? Why, Miss Daniels never lets us bother her, so I thought you'd oblige me this once. Well, I just can't learn it this week, that's all." (Rings off aggrieved, to make room for Mr. Bettelheimer. He is one of the most expensive grocers in town, but as he's a member of the congregation, Mrs. Rabbi must trade with him and pay the piper.)

Mr. Bettelheimer: "I'm afraid your fish is going to be a little late, but I'm all out of salmon steak, so I sent up some red snapper for a change. It's a little more expensive, but—"

Son (raising his voice and the bottle at the same time): "O-ooch." (A crash which brings his mother to his side to find the rug covered with bits of bottle and pasteurized milk. With an air of resignation she hurries back to the phone.)

Mrs. Rabbi: "Then send—" (She half rises in her agony of impatience as son howls and the rabbi, who has cut his lip while shaving, demands why there's never any sticking plaster in the house.)

Mrs. Rabbi (fiercely): "I tell you I bought some, but son chewed it up—oh, I beg your pardon, Mr. Bettelheimer, you were saying—"

Mr. Bettelheimer: "And I hope it won't make you late at your dinner. Mrs. Bettelheimer was saying last week she wondered whether it wasn't hard for you to get through on Friday night, 'cause you're nearly always late at Temple."

Mrs. Rabbi (forgetting her position for a moment and speaking as spitefully as any lay woman): "I wonder how Mrs. Bettelheimer knows I'm late when she's always later than I am."

Mr. Bettelheimer (in majestic wrath): "My wife has four little children to dress and send to the picture show before she gets away, and, anyhow, she expects you as the rabbi's wife to set a good example to the congregation and be there on the minute."

(He rings off and Mrs. Rabbi dashes to the bedroom to tie her husband's tie; then flies to warm another bottle for the baby; then to talk to Miss Dusseldorf over the phone.)

Miss Dusseldorf: "Of course, you don't remember my voice, I'm the young lady soliciting funds for the Home for Infirm Jewish Clerical Workers. I had such a delightful little visit with you last year—remember? Suppose the rabbi's busy as ever, but he'll have time to borrow somebody's machine and take me around—it saves time and maybe I'll make the evening train. So I'll go to services tomorrow if I get up in time and meet him afterwards. (Suggestive pause): And I'm dying to see you and that lovely baby I've heard so much about."

Mrs. Rabbi (as though she still had a maid): "The rabbi must bring you home to dinner—no, I won't put myself out a bit—"

Miss Dusseldorf: "I wouldn't impose on anybody else at such short notice, but as the rabbi's wife, I suppose you're used to it. My love to the rabbi. Good bye till tomorrow."

Mr. Rabbi (foaming with rage): "I won't spent another half day with that pest. I won't have her sit and giggle at me all through dinner, and you're not running a boarding house and had no right to make yourself extra trouble by inviting her."

Mrs. Rabbi (unheeding, as she wrenches from son the manicure scissors his father has given him to quiet him): "Try to get him to sleep. If I don't get into the kitchen soon you'll go to services without your supper."

Mr. Rabbi: "But my sermon—"
 Mrs. Rabbi, who is only human, and has to be nasty to somebody: "Just rehearse it to Sonny and he'll fall asleep sooner." (Dashes toward the kitchen, but is recalled by telephone. Here in breathless discussion she promises Mrs. Katz that she'll surely tell the rabbi that the hymnals he ordered a month ago won't be ready for the holidays; tells Mrs. Turner of the Episcopalian Ladies' Guild that she'll take two tickets for their concert—though she knows she can't afford 'em; suggests the Jewish Encyclopedia to Mrs. Cone who has a paper to write for the Sisterhood the following Monday and wants to know "where to find something about Spinoza and other Jewish musicians"; gives the busy signal to Ted Franklin, a reporter on the morning paper, who wants to know what the rabbi, "as a Hebrew," thinks about an independent Jewish state in Palestine. About to escape, a plaintive voice arrests her.)

Mrs. Magnin: "I've been trying to get you for the last hour. I suppose you're busy—"

Mrs. Rabbi (almost frantic as a sound of sizzling from the kitchen warns her that the hungry rabbi has started to fry the fish): "I am!"

Mrs. Magnin: "Well, Mrs. Hirshfeld said you didn't have a girl and I wanted to tell you about my maid's sister—she'll come cheap. She's never worked out before, but you're such a young housekeeper it'll learn you to teach her all you know, and you can save on her salary, as she won't dare charge as much as my Rosie."

Mrs. Rabbi (as an unrabbinic oath and the clatter of china suggest the destruction of her pet platter): "If you'll call up later—"

Mrs. Magnin: "But I've been trying to get you so long and the line was busy and my Rosie wants to tell her sister tonight. What shall I tell my Rosie?"

Mrs. Rabbi (as another dish smashes and son awakens to howl from his crib): "Tell her to go to Jericho." (Rings off and dashes to the kitchen.)

Mrs. Magnin (more in bewilderment than anger): "I wonder what ailed her? But I heard she had a terrible temper; no wonder she can't keep any help. Anyhow, as the rabbi's wife she ought to be polite to the ladies of the congregation, especially if they're trying to do her a favor."—The Jewish Criterion.

Arab Sentiment in Palestine.

With regard to the reports of Arab dissatisfaction over the prospects of a Jewish State in Palestine, Palestine, the organ of the British Palestine Committee, writes:

"As a military or a political problem all this boils down to very little. The Arab is effervescent, and he has profound respect for the accomplished fact. When the British Government and the British administration in Palestine make it quite plain that they are going to carry out the policy of a Jewish Palestine, and that they mean to stand no nonsense, these political emotions will subside and disappear. All but a very small handful of Arabs will bow to reality, and that small handful which is disinclined to bow will constitute no severe task for the administration. All this is quite well understood by those in charge in Palestine, and it fortifies the argument, strong on so many other grounds, for an early, precise and emphatic announcement of policy by the conference and the British Government. If the question of the political settlement of Damascus were disposed of quickly, that would also help to sweep away illusions. Damascus is bound to be a source of trouble and intrigue so long as its political destiny remains undetermined, and that in spite of the Emir Feisal himself. The Emir is a statesman, and is no party to the bickerings and the manoeuvres of the Effendis, but he is not, and cannot be, fully master in his own house until it is known for certain whether that house is really his. He cannot organize a State and an administration, put down disorderly persons and instil prudent principles into his subjects until his own authority is placed on a solid basis."

Roumania Justifies Herself.

That the Jews of Hungary ought to be grateful to Roumania for saving them from being slaughtered was the contention of Roumanian commanders before the Allied Commission at Budapest. They declared that Roumania had protected the Jews in Hungary and warned off pogroms against them.

LEVY, EVA HEINE.—In pursuance of an order of Honorable Robert Ludlow Fowler, a Surrogate of the County of New York, notice is hereby given to all persons having claims against Eva Heine Levy, late of the County of New York, deceased, to present the same with vouchers thereof to the subscriber, at his place of transacting business, at the office of her attorneys, Messrs. THE JEWS AND MONEY.
The earliest coins mentioned in the Bible are doubtless the gold darics which were issued in the reign of Darius, King of Persia, and were circulated throughout the East. The daric was equivalent to about $5.50. The invention of coining money originated in Asia Minor and spread into Greece. Even after the return of the Jews from the Captivity, there is no evidence that they possessed any native currency until the time of Judas Maccabeus; though, before that time, occasional mention is made of the money of the Persians and Syrians. The standard of Hebrew weights and measures was kept in the sanctuary, and a copy of it was used in the household. The destruction of this ancient standard led to the adoption of various weights and measures from foreign traders.
From the earliest times, precious metals weighed in the balance were used instead of coins. These were usually in the shape of bars or rings. The gold shekel was worth about $10; the value of the silver shekel was equivalent to 40 cents. Portions of the shekel, such as the half shekel, the quarter shekel and the twentieth were also in common use. The mina, or fifty silver shekels was equal to about $33 and a talent of silver is valued at about $2,000.
Joseph was sold by his brethren for twenty pieces of silver, or for $13. The value of a slave, if killed by a beast, was reckoned as thirty pieces of silver, or $16.
The "wedge of gold" which Achan found in Jericho was 50 shakels in weight and was worth about $500, the silver he took was worth about $130. This Babylonian piece of gold is mentioned on a contract tablet in the British Museum.
As a thankoffering for his cure, Naaman the Syrian brought Elisha 6,000 shekels of gold, or about $210,000.
The Mosaic Law recognized the institution of slavery and made various humane provisions as to the status and treatment of slaves; but the Law was very strict in regard to the daily payment of the wages of the laborer: "the wages of him that is hired shall not abide with thee all night until the morning."
Wages are first mentioned as being paid, not in money but in kind by Laban to Jacob: "And Jacob served seven years for Rachel; and they seemed to him a few days, for the love he had for her." So, when Pharaoh's daughter desired a nurse to look after the child Moses she had found amid the bulrushes along the river bank, she chose one of the Canaanitish women and promised to pay her wages for nursing him.
In the East, bracelets for the arms and anklets for the legs were regarded as a means of investing money. They were worn by married women of all ranks, nor could they be taken to pay the debts of the husband. The anklets were frequently adorned with little bells. Bracelets were also worn by the men; they were sometimes used as a badge of royalty, and were broad, jointed bands of gold, silver or brass. Men sometimes wore official gold chains and signet rings and, in Isalah's day, earrings were very common amongst women. The Ishmaelites used to wear earrings and the Amalekites adorned the necks of the camels with gold chains.—S. A. Jewish Chronicle.

Private Silverman.
By I. KAUFMAN.
"Private Silverman!"
No answer.
"Private Silverman!"
No answer.
The lieutenant, who had stood impatiently behind the nervous first sergeant, here broke in on the proceedings.
"Silverman! Where is Silverman?" he asked. "You men have got to learn to answer to your names without wasting time. You've got to realize there's a war going on."
A little, stooped-over man in an ill-fitting uniform broke through from the rear rank and began to shuffle his way to the front. "Here, here," he said. "Here I am. But Jacob, Jacob Silverman, not Private."
"Get back to your place!" roared the lieutenant. Silverman shuffled his way back with a great show of haste. The line stood as stiff and straight as, with its small amount of training, it knew how. But a grin broke through on the faces of the men, and because he was human the lieutenant paid no attention to it.
"Put Private Silverman's name on the list for special fatigue, sergeant."
"Yes, sir."
Discipline must be maintained.
Then the roll call continued under the frowning supervision of the lieutenant, and Private Silverman knew that all of "H" Company enjoyed another huge joke at his expense.
Presently the company was at drill on the field.
Up and down the muddiest drill field in America they marched and counter-marched, in column of squads and in company front, to the right flank and to the left flank. The lieutenant in charge was full of enthusiasm and energy. Nothing that happened on the field, he boasted to himself, escaped his eye. Nothing that happened went without reprimand. That was the only way to train a mob of drafted civilians to become soldiers.

"Private Silverman! You are out of step."
"Yes, sir. Yes, sir."
But it was easier to admit error than to correct it. Silverman attempted an utterly new and original dance-step in the ranks, actually changed his step once, changed it again, and continued on in the blissful conviction that now everything was right.
"Private Silverman," he heard the lieutenant's voice, "you are out of step."
Silverman hopped on one foot stumbled, recovered and committed the capital crime of the infantry—dropped his rifle!

"Sergeant, put Private Silverman's name on the list for extra fatigue."
And after a few minutes, "Private Silverman, don't let your rifle sag over your shoulder. Hold it up, as if you weren't afraid of it."
That might be easy enough to do for one who had nothing else to disturb his mind. But when there were men crowding in on all sides of you and you had to keep just so many inches away from them, and hold your head just so, and keep your shoulders from drooping and your hands from swinging too far forward or too far to the rear—it was bad business. And while he was thinking all this, Private Silverman heard his name called aloud by the lieutenant and a sergeant seized him by the arm and pushed him back into the line, from which he had strayed unaccountably, like a lost sheep.

So it went on from day to day. Private Silverman's story cannot be told in full. He was altogether a misfit. In that conglomerate of men known as "H" Company there were eager but silent Poles, stolid Russians, Italians and inexplicably wild Americans from Iowa and Montana. In the barracks and on the field they took great joy in making life miserable for Silverman. They tied up the sleeves of his shirt so that he couldn't wear it in the morning, lost his leggings for him, planted pins in his breeches and committed all the other atrocities of which red-blooded men are capable, in search of a practical joke.

To Silverman life took on the character of a daily torture. There was reveille, a senseless and altogether uncomfortable institution, requiring one to get out of bed before sunrise and stand shivering in the cold and the dark while a stupid sergeant called out a long list of names. There were the unpalatable and utterly non-Jewish meals, eaten out of a tin messkit on the cold ground. There were the hours of wood-chopping on extra fatigue. There was the drill, drill, until one's arms ached and the muscles were sore and the head was in a whirl. And no matter how conscientiously he put his mind to it there was always something that he did wrong, something for which he was reprimanded and put on extra fatigue.

Finally there came an announcement from the first sergeant before dismissing the company at retreat one afternoon:

"Private Silverman, report to Lieutenant Wilder in the orderly room at half past 5 this afternoon."

Silverman reported; the lieutenant looked him over with a careful scrutiny. He was not altogether certain just how this case should be treated. No instruction that he had received in the training camp could assist him here. He had tried bullying with Silverman; he had tried ridicule and punishment, but without effect. Now he would try a personal appeal.

"Private Silverman," he said, "you are still in the Awkward Squad."
"Yes, sir."
"I don't like to have any of the men in my platoon get lost in the Awkward Squad."
"No, sir."

"Now, Silverman, don't you realize that you are holding back the training of the whole platoon and the whole company?"
Silverman nodded acquiescence.

"I've watched you carefully ever since I came here, and I know you aren't brainless. You're not a fool, Silverman. Why is it that you don't catch on to these simple movements that the Wops and Poles don't have any trouble with?"
Silverman shrugged his shoulders and said: "I dunno." But he seemed to be thinking something over. Presently he stepped nearer to the lieutenant, laid one hand on the desk, and said confidentially:

"I'll tell you how it is, lieutenant."

I don't have any business here at all. That's why. In a store I could be useful. But here not."
Wilder became suspicious. "Do you want a discharge?" he asked.
"It's this way," explained Silverman. "When I make a mistake I don't mean nothing by it."
"Oh, I know you mean well."
"But with Jews it is like that. They are no soldiers. They don't fight. What business has a Jew got with fighting? Give a Jew a store, or a manufactory, for instance, or anything where he can use his head a little, all right. But here—"
"That has nothing to do with it, Silverman. There have been Jewish generals as great as any of them."
"Yes, yes. But soldiering is not a Jewish business." Then he leaned confidentially nearer to the lieutenant. "You know from yourself how it is with us Jews."

"That will do. Stand at attention in the orderly room!" Silverman stood at attention. The regulations are sometimes convenient things to fall back upon. Wilder didn't like the halpatronizing tone of Silverman's voice, as if they both belonged to the same caste or club, but Silverman knew more than his lieutenant about it. Besides, Wilder hadn't been aware before this that he was known to be a Jew—among the enlisted men, at any rate, he felt that he was taken for an officer, like the others, and nothing more. His voice hardened.

"Now, there's a special reason, Silverman, why I called you in this afternoon. Tomorrow morning I will announce to the company that we have received orders to go overseas. And I don't want any poor soldiers in my company when we get over there."

"Mr. Lieutenant," said Silverman, "I want to ask you to do me a favor. I know you can do it."
"What is it?"
"I want you to transfer me to another company."

"To the 'quartermaster'?" This he said with sarcasm, because in war time there is nothing more contemptible in the infantryman's mind than taking shelter in the safety of the non-combatant Quartermaster Corps.
"If you will do it," qualified Silverman.

Wilder shook his head. "I won't do it. No one is going to get any help from me to hide behind a yellow hatcora."
"But why not?" protested Silverman. "About clothing and measurements I understand something. I might be useful. In my store, you understand, I am a good fighter. But what kind of a business is this being a soldier? That's not a business."

He was dismissed summarily. An late that night, through the thin partition that separated the orderly room from the rest of the barracks building, he heard them joking Silverman about the coming overseas movement. For rumors of any kind travel very fast among men in barracks, and it was less than an hour after Wilder got the order before his men knew of it.
"Say, Silvy!"
No answer.
"Say, Silvy!"
"Well, what you want?"
"When you see a German coming what're you going to do Silvy? Drop your gun and look for a yardstick?"
A loud roar of laughter greeted this sally.

"Sergeant," somebody suggested after the noise had subsided a little. "Wouldn't Silvy give a fierce account of himself with a pair of shears instead of a bayonet?"
And Lieutenant Wilder, in the orderly room, groaned in anguish of soul to think that the War Department was sending him to the field of battle with men like Private Silverman.

Weeks passed. France was bleeding to death. There came a time when American food and American railroads were no longer sufficient for France, and she cried out for men, men, and more men. Company "H" was rushed across to France and into a "rest" camp behind the lines. But there was very little rest to be had there. They must train-train with the last ounce of strength that was in every man for the meeting of the enemy. There would be months and months of that before they were fit for the great encounter. So at least Lieutenant Yilder preached to his men. Then there came a sudden, swift order; a sudden, swift movement of troops, and "H" Company, along with the whole division, of which it formed a part, was on its way to the terrible fascinating front.
Such as are left now of what was "H" Company when it took over its section of the line never talk of those first three weeks except on compulsion, but they remember every detail of them with ghastly accuracy. Dirt. Rain. Hours and hours of rain that turned the earth into a semi-liquid. Miles of irregular duckboards along which one stumbled and recovered and stumbled on. The boom of the cannon and the spattering of machine guns were the least of it. Food only occasionally, as luck played with them or against them. Rain. And dirt. Dirt in their clothes and their food.
For three weeks "H" Company held the line where it had taken it over. No relief and no promise of relief. Then somebody blundered, and the orders came to advance. It was a blunder because "H" Company, for one, had been for the last forty-eight hours without food. For the last day and a half their communications had been entirely cut off. No telephone connection with headquarters or with either flank company. Three times runners were sent out, but did not return. The chances were great that that phantom sniper from somewhere in the woods had picked them off. Finally the telephone began to function again, and the first words that Lieutenant Wilder heard through the buzzing and humming of the instrument were the words of the order to advance at sunrise and take no prisoners. It was an outrage.
They advanced. Lieutenant Wilder had always been proud of the discipline of his men. He had them under his control always. But he confessed to himself that now his control had vanished. No sooner were the men out of their slippery trench than they became very different sort of beings from the soldiers whom he had taught and trained. They skulked together in groups. They took to cover, or advanced, without command. They paid very little attention to command. In a mysteriously short time he did not know where half of his company had gone. But although the thing was a terrible mess, a blunder from higher up as he thought, he was proud of that conglomerate of his. There were no shirkers among them. Such as he caught a glimpse of now and again betrayed no sign of hesitation, but were advancing steadily, body bent forward, rifle gripped. They would give a good account of themselves. Of course, there was Silverman—but Silverman had been sent back with a message and had not returned.
Things change very swiftly in battle. The booming that came from in front of them lost its masculine bass quality and became a feminine contralto. Without warning a machine-gun began to spit on their left front. The world slipped from Wilder's consciousness. He gritted his teeth and just managed to recover it. But he found himself stretched out in a puddle of dirty rain-water, with a great pain where his leg had been broken by a machine-gun bullet, and with the knowledge that his company had been held up if not wiped out. He tried to move, but couldn't. He knew very clearly that that machine-gun crew must be got rid of, but he could do nothing.
Through the noise and confusion of the whole business he became aware of an isolated sound very close to him. The crack of a rifle; then the bolt drawn back, and after a short delay again the crack of a rifle. That was it. Wilder looked around with great difficulty for the source of the sound. In a hollow where the ground had been torn up by shells from both sides, against the upturned root of a blasted tree lay the squat form of a soldier in olive drab; and it was therefore an American rifle that was delivering shots to the enemy, trying its luck against the machine-gun nest that held them up. Wilder looked around languidly, for he was fast losing blood. What he saw made him fear for his own sanity. Silverman. Private Silverman carrying on. He must have fought and dodged his way like a hero back into the line. Or, no—it was all a hallucination brought on by his wounds.
One, two, three of the devils in field-gray fell by their machine-gun. But here was another one of them, creeping along the irregular ground, on his belly, like the Old Testament serpent, with a bayonet at the end of his outstretched Mauser pointing at Silverman. Wilder wanted to shout, but his voice failed him and his right arm was caught as in a vise under his body—probably broken. The Mauser moved closer and closer. Suddenly Silverman himself whirled around, but too late. The German had fired at a point-blank target only a few feet away. At the same instant Silverman struck with his rifle—struck blindly in the throes of death, and both men staggered to the ground together.—The Jewish Criterion.

OLD EGYPT TURKISH CIGARETTES

Why 100% Turkish?

Because "100% PURE" is the foundation stone of Quality—not only in cigarettes but in everything else.

"100% PURE" American is the finest thing on Earth.

"100% PURE" Havana makes the world's best cigars.

"100% PURE" milk is the only kind the milkman can honestly sell you.

"100% PURE" wool wears longer and looks better in your clothes.

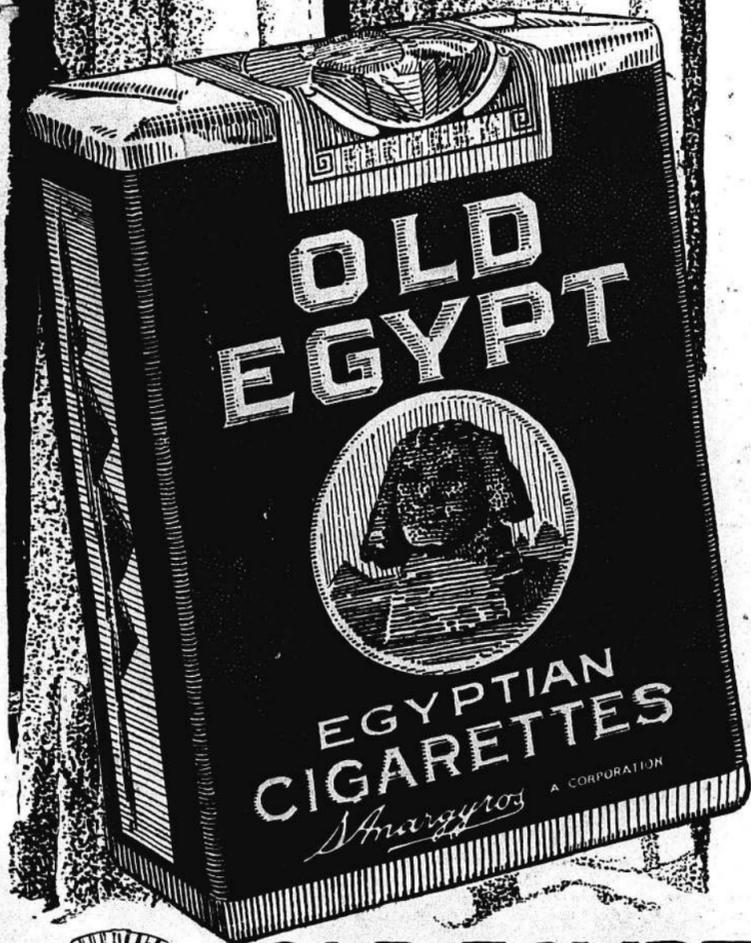

No Manufacturer improves "100% PURE" Turkish tobacco by mixing some other tobacco with it.

The only thing the manufacturer accomplishes is to cheapen the cost of his cigarette—and he knows it! And when you smoke it, you know it!!

The chief reason that "OLD EGYPT" has so much Quality and Charm is that it is "100% PURE" Turkish Tobacco.

15 for 17c

You can't buy better for 25 cents

OLD EGYPT— the Wonder of the Age.
100% pure Turkish tobacco—in the inexpensive air-tight paper cup.
